Huge Crowd Sees His Inauguration

Probe Demanded Into Expenditures of Road Commission.

Partial text of Gov. Nice's inaugural address—Page 10.

By Laurance F. Stuntz.
(Staff Correspondent of The Post).

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 9.—With a hand that trembled and held a borrowed fountain pen, Harry W. Nice today signed his oath of office and became the Free State's first Republican Governor in more than 20 years.

Immediately afterward, addressing a joint session of the House and Senate, he charged the State roads commission with wasting money and asked authority to appoint an investigating committee. Twelve other recommendations to the Legislature were also included in the inaugural address.

Accompanying Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, who was relinquishing the reins of government after 15 years, Gov. Nice entered the packed Senate chamber at 11:59 a. m. Chief Justice Carroll T. Bond read him the oath, in which he promised to act as Governor "diligently and faithfully, without partiality or prejudice." Gov. Nice's upraised right hand trembled noticeably as he repeated the words of the oath.

Had No Fountain Pen.

The swearing-in completed, Gov. Nice sat down to sign the test book. He fumbled for his pen, but did not have it. Speaker of the House Emanuel Gorfinne and President of the Senate Lansdale G. Sasscer reached for their pockets, but David C. Winebrenner 3d forestalled them and handed the new Governor his own pen.

In his inaugural address, Gov. Nice dealt briefly but explicitly with the Republican Party. "The Republican Party is not dead," he said. "It is very much alive—alive to its responsibilities to the people. It will be conservative without stagnation, progressive without radicalism, and through it permanency of prosperity will come."

The State roads commission is "justly chargeable with extravagance," Gov. Nice declared before the huge crowd wedged into the House chamber. He pointed out that though the road construction program is smaller than it was four years ago, the expenditures for right-of-way have mounted from less than $50,000 to $1,770,000. By strict economies in roads expenditures his campaign promise of $2 auto license tags can be fulfilled, he added.

Proposes Centralized Relief.

Proposals made by the new Governor include:

1. Centralized control of relief

Justices Split On Gold Case, Actions Hint

'Windfall, Not Indemnity for Loss Sought,' Cummings Says.

By Elliott Thurston.

The second day's hearing before the Supreme Court on the so-called gold cases left lawyers and spectators with a definite—though by no means reliable—impression that the court is sharply divided on whether Congress had the right to abrogate the gold clauses in some $100,000,000,000 of public and private bonds.

It served also to bring into focus once again the possibility of further international action to stabilize exchanges. Attorney General Cummings, toward the end of his argument to the court, declared that if the gold clauses are upheld or construed to require payment of $1.69 for every $1 of the face value of bonds "it would take us back, not to the Constitution, but to chaos." And emphasizing that the Government would then be hampered in stabilizing the dollar, he added:

"The time will come when the United States will be in conference with the other nations of the earth, with a view to stabilizing the currency and fixing standards. Let nothing be done here that will let our Nation enter such a conference on crutches, a cripple among the nations of the earth."

Roosevelt's Comment.

Asked about this seeming hint of impending action, and about a foreign cable reporting that France and Holland will urge the British to renew stabilization overtures to the United States, President Roosevelt said, late in the day, that he had been informed of the cable, but that the talk of coming action was in the realm of speculative stabilization.

Resolution Ratifying the Protocol Reported by Committee.

Issue Will Be Brought Out for Debate; Foes Assail Action.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Another step in the bitter 12-year fight over adherence by the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice, popularly known as the World Court, was taken yesterday when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by a vote of 14 to 7 reported a resolution ratifying the Root-Hurst protocol.

The committee attached to the resolution of ratification the specification that such action was taken "with the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest."

Acceptance Not Impaired.

This condition was not regarded as impairing this country's acceptance of the World Court protocol, because it frequently has been contended that the Root formula in dealing with the old reservation, No. 5, made by the Senate in 1926 covered the very point which the committee yesterday specified in more direct language.

Regarded as of more significance, no attempt was made in the committee to add to the resolution the so-called Moses clause, which would withhold the signature of the United States from the World Court protocol until the other signatory powers had indicated through an exchange of notes their acceptance of the understanding regarding advisory opinions.

Will Come Up for Debate.

Senate Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson said he would call the World Court resolution up for debate in the Senate "when I think the time is proper and opportune."

It is understood that he has in mind bringing the World Court before the Senate when there is a lull in the consideration of domestic questions. In this way he plans to give ample time for debate during the session, moving quickly for a vote when he thinks that legitimate debate has been exhausted.

Adherence to the World Court is one of the most controversial subjects ever to come before the Senate. Off and on for 12 years it has been the subject of bitter debate in which a small minority has determinedly fought to prevent a final vote. In 1926, when the World Court protocol was first ratified, subject to five reservations, it was necessary to resort to the Senate's drastic cloture rule to end a filibuster. This may become necessary again.

Foes of League Aroused.

The action of the committee yesterday set off the so-called irreconcilables to American participation in international affairs. Senator Hiram Johnson (Republican), of California, declared that American adherence to the World Court was "a back-door" entry into the League of Nations, and he asserted "I am opposed to joining the League of Nations either front or back door or otherwise."

"I am opposed to the World Court," he asserted, sounding the keynote of the opposition. "We made an advance today because we reaffirmed the Senate's fifth reservation, which precludes the court from entertaining any request for an advisory opinion on any question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

"This provision may, in part, protect us in the future, but the pitfalls which are so obvious to those who are thinking of our country

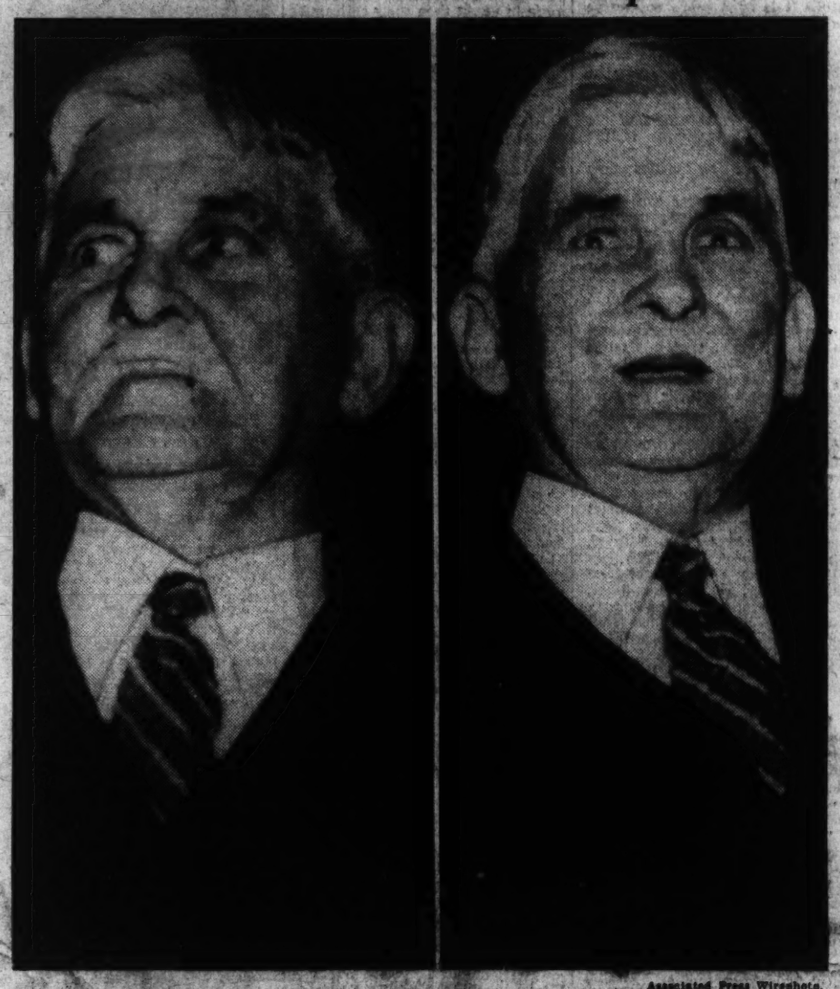
Jafsie Thrice Identifies Hauptmann; Brands Him the Nursery Intruder And Recipient of $50,000 Ransom

Dr. Condon as He Accused Hauptmann



Associated Press Wirephoto.

Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon's direct accusations of Hauptmann yesterday were the sensation of the day.

Unshaken Onslaught Jolts Defense Forces

Condon Sat on Bench in Cemetery and Talked to Carpenter, Who Identified Safety Pins From Crib, He Swears.

Lindbergh in Court Fights Back Tears As Doctor Tells of Futile Air Mission

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 9 (AP).—Dr. John F. Condon, "Jafsie" of the Lindbergh kidnaping case, opened up new pages of that fantastic tragedy today with a witness-stand story that thrice branded Bruno Richard Hauptmann as "John," the cemetery ransom taker.

Firm, almost eager, in his accusal, the 74-year-old former Bronx teacher told his direct story for two-and-a-half hours at Hauptmann's murder trial and then turned on defense inquisitors with vigor.

Again the chiding schoolmaster, he lectured Edward J. Reilly, chief of defense counsel, until the portly lawyer protested he could "take it."

At one point his testimony, on cross-examination, provoked a defense demand for a mistrial. The motion, directly the result of an interruption by Attorney General David T. Wilentz, was denied quickly by Justice Thomas W. Trenchard.

"'John' Is Hauptmann!"

There was no doubt in the voice of the tall, white-haired scholar as he shook a pedantic finger and repeated:

"'John' is Bruno Richard Hauptmann!"

Nor did his story falter as he told of the eerie cemetery tryst that finally led him to put $50,000 in the hands of the furtive "John"—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's ransom for the baby already slain.

Not even at the height of Reilly's relentless questions, pointed patently at the question of Condon's own good faith in the case, did he waver.

"Not for me, not for me," he replied to the suggestion that he rest for a few minutes. "Let him go right on all night."

The former teacher was on the witness stand for almost the entire day. He was called after brief examination of Al Reich, his bodyguard, who told about the packing of the money box, and who disclaimed being "one of the executives in this."

"I was just a dot on the 'I,'" he said.

Tomorrow Dr. Condon faces more searching queries from the carpenter's defender, on Reilly's own promise that the cross-examination will consume a day and a half.

In every detail today "Jafsie" told his story of the arrangements for the ransom; of his first tryst with "John" in Woodlawn Cemetery, the Bronx, soon after the kidnaping; how he arranged to have the child's sleeping suit sent to him as proof that "John's" supposed superiors had the baby.

Tells of Cemetery Scene.

Then he carried the moving narrative to St. Raymond's Cemetery, also in the Bronx, where on the night of April 2, 1932, he handed "John" the wooden box containing the ransom.

He described the way "John" accepted the money box; his voice and actions, and the later fruitless search with Col. Lindbergh along the New England coast in quest of the "Boad Nellie" where "John" had said the baby would be found alive and well.

There were moments in his testimony when the comic element entered and even Col. Lindbergh flushed and smiled. But most of the time as the tragic tale came from the lips of the big, retired teacher there was a hush over the courtroom where Hauptmann stands trial before a jury of eight men and four women.

In all, Dr. Condon named Hauptmann three times as "John."

And in his direct examination by Attorney General Wilentz he revealed publicly for the first time that he had seen "John" last August walking in the Bronx.

"One evening, at the corner of Williamsbridge road and Pelham parkway," Dr. Condon said, "I saw him walk over in the direction of what I found to be his home after. I was in a bus going in the opposite direction, but I did not pursue him, owing to the fact that he got into the woods which is there. You have to see that to understand what I mean."

Wilentz led Dr. Condon quickly to the payment of the ransom as he started his story.

"Did you give some money in a box that night?" Wilentz asked when the testimony reached the point of the visit to St. Raymond's Cemetery.

"I did."

Q. and whom did you give that money to?—A. John.

Smiles Contemptuously.

The shaggy head of the teacher went down. Over his ruddy face came a fleeting change of expression, a kind of contemptuous smile. Then his head came up with a sudden jerk, he looked at Wilentz and, shaking his finger vigorously, he said:

"John is Bruno Richard Hauptmann."

Col. Lindbergh had his eyes fixed on the teacher as Condon turned to gaze reprovingly at Hauptmann. The defendant straightened, turned pale, then flushed.

"Jafsie's" amazing vigor, his torrents of details as he told his story, his odd insistence on precise definitions, his gestures, voice and mannerisms caused ripples of comment in the court, and occasional explosive laughter, which Justice Trenchard quickly suppressed.

One tense point of the cross-examination came when Reilly demanded to know if "Jafsie" had signed for a book on symbols at the New York Public Library shortly before the kidnaping of March 1, 1932.

Wilentz objected strenuously and then promised to produce the library card, although, he said, it had nothing to do with the case.

Symbols on Notes.

The prosecution led the elderly witness skillfully through the preliminary conference with "John" in Woodlawn Cemetery, through more details of the ransom payment itself and to the futile search for the baby on a "boad."

Col. Lindbergh's eyes were moist as "Jafsie" told of the empty hunt, and the overflow courtroom crowd hung on his words.

He told how the coughing "John" asked if he would "burn" if the baby were dead; described himself as "only a go-between" and refused to take Dr. Condon to "the leader," who, he said, "would smack me up."

At one point he quoted "John" as saying:

"Nobody else shall get the baby but you, and you can put that baby's arms around Mrs. Lindbergh's neck."

But the baby already was dead—its body in a shallow grave near the Sourland home from which he was stolen.

Italy, France May Ask Reich To Arms Talk

Mussolini Acts to Take Over Ceded Territory in Africa Quickly.

Rome, Jan. 9 (AP).—Benito Mussolini made ready today to take over quickly Italy's new territories in Africa, ceded to her by France, as the suggestion was advanced that the two nations might invite Germany to renew discussions concerning disarmament.

Gen. Emilio de Bono, minister of colonies, was reported preparing to sail for Africa to supervise incorporation into Eritrea of the strategic triangle of territory at the southern end of the Red Sea.

It was expected an official communique would be issued tomorrow announcing De Bono's resignation from the cabinet and Mussolini's addition of the colonies portfolio to the six he already holds—foreign affairs, war, marines, aviation, interior and corporations.

Gen. de Bono, veteran Fascist, also will effect the consolidation of Somaliland and Eritrea under one administration.

German Collaboration.

The suggestion of German collaboration in an agreement for disarmament came from an authoritative source, which said France and Italy have chosen the Italian disarmament memorandum of last January as the basis for granting Germany partial rearmament, provided she returns to the League of Nations and enters the proposed non-intervention pact for central Europe.

An official communique issued last night giving the details of the several agreements Mussolini and Pierre Laval, French foreign minister, concluded during the latter's four-day visit to Rome said the two agreed that no power could abrogate its obligations concerning armaments by "unilateral act."

This ws taken to mean Italy and France would not recognize Germany's alleged rearmament under present conditions. The fact that the agreement provided for consultation between France and Italy in case such unilateral modification did take place was regarded, however, as indication the two powers may make some concessions if Germany returns to Geneva and otherwise cooperates.

Italian Memorandum.

The Italian memorandum would have accorded six-ton tanks and limited military aviation to Germany, even though both forms of armament were banned under the treaty of Versailles, and allowed her an army of 300,000 men.

Discussion today of the French concessions in Africa revealed the

Jafsie's 3-Point Attack Thrusts German Into Shadow of Chair

(Copyright, 1935, by United Press.)

Hunterdon County Courthouse, Flemington, N. J., Jan. 9.—If Bruno Richard Hauptmann goes to the electric chair, Dr. John Francis Condon must accept responsibility for pushing the German former machine gunner toward his doom.

"Jafsie"—a mumbling, emphatic old man who retains the precise and positive habits he acquired in years as a school teacher—sat in the witness box today and struck blow after blow at the pale prisoner who is accused of the murder of kidnaped Baby Charles August Lindbergh.

Hauptmann did not cringe under the blows. His eyes were wide and glaring, but his lips never opened.

Other people have identified Hauptmann's voice, his face and his handwriting, but nobody has ever been able to testify that he was the man that climbed into the Lindbergh nursery and carried the curly-haired son of Charles and Anne Lindbergh out a window to death.

Swears Hauptmann Was in the Nursery.

But "Jafsie" came close to that today in his testimony which:

Placed Hauptmann in the Lindbergh nursery on the night of the crime by telling how the prisoner identified, days later, some of the safety pins which were used to hold down the baby's blanket.

Identified Hauptmann as the man to whom he paid $50,000 ransom in a futile attempt to regain the stolen baby alive.

"Jafsie" said that on an eerie night when everything in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York, was black except the tombstones which marched like a white regiment up and down the slopes, he sat on a bench, with a man who had taken the name of "John" for the traffic in blood money that was about to take place, and whom he now knew to be Hauptmann.

"Jafsie" said he reached in his pocket and brought out two safety pins.

"John," he asked, "do you recognize these?"

"Yes," he quoted John as replying, "those are the pins that were used to fasten down the baby's crib."

The blow fell heavily on the table where defense lawyers were clustered, their brains drumming at top speed in an attempt to find a counter-attack for this deadly thrust. They realized that this was the first time anybody had sworn that Hauptmann was in the nursery, for if he was not there how could he identify the safety pins?

But defense counsel fought desperately to plant the impression in the mind of the jury that "Jafsie" himself was involved in the conspiracy. At the end of the day, "Jafsie," weary and confused, was in trouble. Frederick Pope, of defense counsel, said:

Jafsie Confused by Grilling on Symbol.

What he meant was this:

The note that was left on the nursery window in the Lindbergh home was signed by a red spot something that looks as if it were made by wetting an ink-bottle stopper and pressing it onto paper. Around that red spot are three blue circles. Underneath those, three holes were punched in the paper.

Now the first letter that Condon received did not bear that symbol. It simply told he was satisfactory as an intermediary and was unsigned. But inclosed in Condon's letter was another one for Lindbergh, which did bear the red-and-blue symbol.

Hauptmann's lawyers asked Condon how he knew that Lindbergh's letter bore the symbol when he had just testified that he didn't open it. The old man had become weary and confused by this time, and did not give a satisfactory answer—in fact, he gave no answer at all because defense counsel kept hammering at him and demanding that he answer "yes" or "no." They were trying to leave the inference that Condon knew the symbol, and did not have to open Lindbergh's letter to find out what it was.

After court recessed, lawyers for the State said Condon could explain the incident. They contended he telephoned Lindbergh after the letters arrived and received instructions from the colonel to open the letter addressed to him. That is the way, they say, that Jafsie learned the symbol.

Revolt Feared, Lisbon Tense

President Under Guard as Rumors Are Heard of Uprising by Reds.

Lisbon, Portugal, Jan. 9 (U.P.). Troops were confined to barracks in readiness for trouble tonight, following persistent rumors of a Communist scheme of nation-wide revolution.

President Gen. Antonio Oscar de Fragoso Carmona was under heavy military guard. Troops circulated in his quarters and presidential offices.

Only persons in the confidence of the highest officials were admitted, and these only on special invitation.

Rumors said the Communist revolt was being planned in Spain, where a new outbreak was planned simultaneously.

Bonus Support Is Voted By California Assembly

Sacramento, Calif., Jan. 9 (AP). The California Assembly, by a vote of 68 to 7, passed without debate today a resolution memorializing Congress to pay the soldiers' bonus immediately. It now goes to the Senate.

Another resolution, memorializing Congress to pass adequate old-age pension legislation, swept the Assembly, 78 to 0. This also goes to the Senate for final action.

Capital Fights Fog Third Day; Bitter Blizzard Grips Europe

Snow Falls on Riviera, and Washingtonians Can't See Each Other for Mists; D. C. May Be Normal by Tonight.

Groping through a vaporous sea, Washingtonians passed their third day fogbound yesterday.

About a third of an inch of rain fell yesterday in a heavy, gray drizzle, and toward evening the fog intensified. Traffic once more was slow, and pedestrians, in street lights, seemed to dive in and out of the shadows as police took all precautions to protect citizens.

One serious mishap was reported when an elderly man was struck by a street car at Thomas circle and Fourteenth street, and critically injured.

Up and down Pennsylvania avenue and the Mall, through the entire downtown district, and out in the suburbs, the street lamps last night winked through the mists like gigantic sleep-blurred eyes.

The Weather Bureau reported the fog had cleared as far north as Virginia, and probably would leave Washington by tonight.

Yesterday's sultry maximum was 55 at 3 p. m., and the minimum was 48 at 7:30 a. m.

Seven ocean-going vessels were reported by the Associated Press to be fogbound in Chesapeake Bay. The Baltimore Mail Line ship City of Norfolk, with 19 passengers on board from Havre and Hamburg, was said to be creeping up the bay to Baltimore.

Throughout Washington and Baltimore air traffic remained fog bound.

Court Rules Publishers May Criticize Courts

Indianapolis, Jan. 9 (AP).—Declaring "courts and judges are not and should not be above criticism," the Indiana Supreme Court today reversed the contempt conviction of Don Nixon, late publisher of the Wabash Plain Dealer.

The publisher was fined $100 and sentenced to serve ten days in jail by Judge Frank O. Switzer of the Wabash Circuit Court for published criticism of the receiver appointed by Judge Switzer for the Wabash County Loan & Trust Co. Reversal of Nixon's conviction came several months after his death of injuries suffered in an automobile accident.

Price Control Wins Backing In Hearing Here

By Felix Bruner.

A considerable section of American business still wishes to remain under the sheltering if somewhat clipped wings of the Blue Eagle, members of the National Industrial Recovery Board were told yesterday as hearings on price control provisions of codes were begun.

With the Commerce Department auditorium filled and scores of spectators unable to obtain admittance, representatives of almost every kind of business and industry began giving their views on price fixing, open price listing, prohibition of sales below cost and other price elements contained in more than 300 of the 700 NRA codes.

Price Control Favored.

While the majority of speakers favored some kind of price control, ranging from publication of prices after a sale is made to outright price fixing, there was some outspoken opposition to any price provisions in codes.

Notable among the opponents of price control was Q. Forrest Walker, economist for R. H. Macy & Co., New York department store.

"Beyond question," Walker said, "our codes tend to foster monopoly and monopolistic practices, and they harass and oppress small enterprises through the economic tyranny of trade majorities.

Attack Made on Codes.

"It is probably not a mere coincidence that the decline in industrial production in 1934 closely follows the practical completion of codification. The plain fact is that our codes have become complicated mechanisms for artificial, arbitrary and capricious price control."

Walker, in an eloquent tirade against the whole NRA plan, referred to codes as "characters of price slavery."

"These devices," he said, "are doomed to economic failure because they can operate only to foster special privilege, destroy initiative and the opportunity for private profit."

Walker's speech was the high mark in an otherwise colorless day of repetitive statements favoring price control in specific industries.

Calm Session Noted.

The hearing, conducted in a cool and deliberative manner, contrasted with similar sessions a year ago when Gen. Hugh S. Johnson conducted his "three ring circus" on the whole question of NRA.

The hearings have been called for the purpose of formulating a broad general price policy for NRA. Officials of the recovery organization feel that price control provisions should be relaxed to stimulate a freer flow of business. In explaining the attitude of the board, S. Clay Williams, chairman, said one of the objects of the recovery act is to "eliminate unfair competitive practices and yet stop short of any destruction of the competitive system."

Leon Henderson, director of the research and planning division of NRA, told the business men that cost control and cost formula have been emphasized by NRA, but that it never regarded price control as price fixing. He said that Government intervention in the price situation "to prevent a bankrupt era" had been only natural.

Control Is Defended.

"Experience recently has shown," Henderson said, "that where there has been price competition, production has been maintained and employment has been maintained. Assuming that Government interference is sometimes a necessity, and socially desirable, why should not the Government in addition to granting power to establish prices, also mobilize its resources to break rigid price structures?"

Sol Rosenblatt, director of compliance and enforcement, told the audience that it was almost impossible to enforce price provisions of most industrial codes. He said the public is not naturally opposed to selling below cost.

The first speaker representing industry was Herman H. Lind, general manager of the National Machine Tool Builders' Association.

"If the open, one-price policy has proven itself a sound practice through its use in the retail trade industries and such other industries as have adopted it, it should be possible to make it practicable in all other industries," he said.

"Open Price" Supported.

Support of the open price provision as being not merely a "defense" provision but one constituting "one of the most fundamentally constructive steps toward making it possible to have intelligent management of American business" came from Henry S. Dennison of the Dennison Manufacturing Co. of Framingham, Mass.

Dennison, whose remarks drew applause from the audience, said that labor provisions alone would not bring about conditions of fair competition. He said labor in the end would suffer most from unfair price cutting and unfair competitive practices. Open price arguments were repeated by John W. O'Leary, Chicago, president of the Machinery and Allied Products Institute.

Irving C. Fox, representing the National Retail Dry Goods Association, declared he was in favor of the elimination of "predatory price cutting," but added that he was "unalterably opposed to provisions which make for price fixing."

Favor Price Provisions.

Price provisions were favored by most of the subsequent speakers, except Walker. They included Charles J. Brand, executive director of the Fertilizer Recovery Committee; Wheeler Sammons, of the National Retail Drug Code Authority, and J. Harvey Williams, member of the Drop Forge Industry Code Authority.

Opposition, however, was sounded in a letter from Alfred Reeves, vice president of the Automobile Manufacturers Association. The association, he said, has unanimously expressed its opposition to "the continuation of trade practice provisions in any code of fair competition where the direct or indirect objective is price fixing, price maintenance or production control."

More than 250 business representatives have asked to be heard. Undoubtedly this list will be reduced as the hearings go on, but indications are they will continue for several days.

Between You and Me

The G. O. P. and Hot Oil; Is Hull Longing for Senate? What Does Cummings 'Chaw'?

By Raymond Clapper

IT BEGINS to look as if the Supreme Court put heart in the Republicans with its hot oil decision, which knocked a front tooth out of NRA and spanked Congress for abdicating legislative duties in favor of the President.

For two years Republicans have been protesting that the New Deal was trampling the Constitution underfoot. The New Dealers merely smiled and told the Republicans that the Supreme Court could be trusted to pass on such questions.

The first word of the court on the New Deal was that in one instance it had overstepped the technical line. There was no wholesale indictment and the decision rested largely upon a technicality in that Congress omitted to state its policy specifically in section 9(c).

But that has been enough to stir the Republicans, especially as the decision came just as Congress was asked to hand over $4,000,000,000 for work relief in a lump sum, to be spent as the Administration should later decide, without congressional earmarking or apron strings of any kind.

They may not get anywhere but some of the more persevering Republicans have begun to resist. They are working on curbing measures.

• • • •

Democrats are supremely confident that the money will be handed over without restriction. Some Republican leaders in Congress are privately of the same opinion. But before this happens certain Republicans will make an effort and as part of their protest they will attempt to show that PWA has been a failure as a work maker. Up to now PWA has spent about $1,250,000,000 on construction projects and has provided about 650,000,000 man-hours of labor. That is equal to a year's work for 300,000 men on a 40-hour week basis.

Mr. Roosevelt wants to put 3,500,000 men on direct work relief. On that basis, if very amateur arithmetic does not betray us, an appropriation of more than $14,000,000,000 would be required. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt expects to concentrate on types of work which will use a greater proportion of labor per dollar of material cost than was the case with PWA. Even so, it would appear that Senator La Follette and others urging $10,000,000,000 or more for work relief have the arithmetic of the problem on their side.

Is it any wonder that most persons in Congress would rather take Mr. Roosevelt's word for it and let him keep the responsibility?

• • • •

Down in Tennessee some folks think they see signs that Secretary of State Cordell Hull is beginning to look pensively toward the Senate again. The seat which he quit to enter the Roosevelt Cabinet two years ago will be on the block next year again. It has been kept warm meantime by Nathan L. Bachman, who can be easily spotted by Senate gallery visitors as the silent Senator who wears no waistcoat winter or summer and who tucks the ends of his black tie under his collar. He was appointed to the vacancy when Hull resigned and was elected last November for the remaining two years of the term, teaming up as No. 3 in a combination with Senator McKellar and Gov. Hill McAlister.

Tennessee politics are almost as intricate and personal as those of a Latin American republic, and Mr. Hull, who always follows the prudent investment theory, prefers to withhold a decision at present rather than gamble in political futures this far ahead. He is keeping up his contacts in the State, making frequent visits, and in his dignified way keeping his name in electric lights as Tennessee's most prominent citizen.

• • • •

During the gold case arguments, some Supreme Court justices were wondering what Attorney General Cummings was chewing. It was reported at first to be chewing gum but it wasn't. Just what it was has not yet been ascertained. Reliable authority provides the information that General Cummings has a habit of chewing almost anything at hand, a piece of torn handkerchief, or a scrap of paper, or a match. His wife scolds him about it frequently but it doesn't do any good.

The reason some members of the court were interested is that they were envious. Being unable to smoke in the courtroom they often have wished for something to chew. Gum seems undignified. There is good court precedent for chewing tobacco but it has gone out of favor. That is too bad because it is even more conducive to calm reflection than a pipe.

• • • •

President Roosevelt emphasizes that expenditures proposed in the new budget can be financed by borrowing and without impairment to the sound credit of the Government. Numerous factors enter into the making of such a judgment and authorities may differ.

Curbstone taxpayers can get a rough picture by falling back on comparisons. These show that a public debt of $34,000,000,000 in the United States would be far less proportionately than Great Britain's. Such a debt would amount to $270 per capita as compared with a $696 per capita debt in Great Britain, $262 in France and $124 in Italy. In the latter two countries the public debt was scaled down by drastic revaluation, but the British figure provides a reasonably normal basis of comparison. When the debts of State and local governments are added, the American per capita figure goes up to about $350. In 1932, so the National Industrial Conference Board reports, payments for debt service, Federal, State and local, were 16.5 per cent of gross expenditures and 29.2 per cent of tax collections. The board reports that the American people are paying out one-fifth of the national income in taxes.

There's still blood left in that thar turnip.

Indian tribes living on Government reservations soon will have their own courts and criminal codes. The Office of Indian Affairs has prepared a criminal code covering 38 offenses, including assault, kidnaping, forgery, reckless driving, bribery and other peccadillos. Indian judges are to exercise jurisdiction over such offenses.

Hitherto the Secretary of Interior has had practically absolute power to punish Indians for offenses excepting murder and larceny, over which Federal district courts have jurisdiction. Indian judges have been used but their decisions have been subject to review by the Secretary of Interior. The purpose of the new code is to give the Indian tribes a substantial measure of control over their own members in the field of law and order. At present nearly 200,000 Indians, occupying an area larger than New England, are subject to minute dictation and control by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of Interior.

The Great White Father has his erring children to take care of and Indian Commissioner John Collier is anxious to see if the Indian can't do as good a job for himself.

Court Divided In Gold Debate, Hint at Hearing

'Windfall, Not Indemnity for Loss Is Sought,' Cummings Says.

clash of legal and economic lore. The attorney general, towering over counsel's desk before the long judicial bench, was making his first official appearance on behalf of the government. He was heard without interruption, but those who followed him faced a barrage of questions from the bench, chiefly from Justices McReynolds, Butler, Van Devanter and Sutherland, who have usually been labelled as the conservatives of the court and seemed to many yesterday—though the deduction is a mere guess—to be far more in doubt than their colleagues about the power of Congress.

Hughes Clarifies Points.

Justices Brandeis, Roberts and Cardozo remained silent. Justice Stone put in a few questions. Chief Justice Hughes several times elucidated more clearly the Government's points. The Chief Justice, long familiar with analagous issues raised in cases before the Permanent Court of International Justice when he was on that tribunal, was the only one to bring in the important economic question of the relation of the dollar to commodities—to purchasing power. Economists in the audience would have been inclined to deduce that the Chief Justice was the only one of those who participated in the discussion to combine the sciences of law and economics.

Rather, some of the questions from the bench appeared to be predicated on the view that failure to pay in gold or in present value of gold entailed loss or, at least, denial to a bondholder of some gain to which he was entitled.

The Attorney General, echoing the New Deal's economic conceptions, argued that in demanding $1.69, or present gold equivalence, those who are suing on the gold clauses "are seeking a windfall, not an indemnity for loss."

Denies "Equivalence" Sought.

"The respondents," said his brief, "are not seeking 'equivalence.' They are seeking an opportunity to enrich themselves upon a theory which allocates to them greater returns from a breach of the expressed obligation than from its performance." By this he meant that if the actual gold were paid out to a bondholder, the bondholder would then be able to turn it into the Treasury only for its old, not its new dollar value.

The point is highly important because if the makers of gold bonds must pay $1.69 instead of $1 the $100,000,000,000 of promises to pay in gold become $169,000,000,000. For this reason, the railroads and other corporations are, in effect, joining the Government in arguing that if gold is unobtainable the maker of the promise to pay in gold may pay dollars—not dollars equal to the Government's present price for gold, but just plain dollars.

Again yesterday Senators Robinson, Democratic leader of the Senate, Wagner, Gore and several of their colleagues sat in court to hear the argument on what is undoubtedly the most far-reaching New Deal issue to come up for review before the highest court.

Followed by Reed.

The Attorney General was followed by tall, spruce Stanley Reed, general counsel for the RFC. He is terse, keen, factual, and eschews the oratorical method. He was much questioned, especially by Justices Butler and McReynolds. The former insisted that Reed's attitude was that if Congress decreed a dime to be a dollar, payment would then be legal in dimes. Reed agreed. Nobody raised the question of whether a dime might not sometime become equal to a dollar in buying power.

To Reed's argument that, were gold paid out, the recipient would have to hand it over to the Treasury for the old dollar price, Justice McReynolds retorted that this raised another constitutional question.

Railroad's Situation.

Edward J. White, counsel for trustees of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, followed Reed, and said that his road's funded debt would become $746,000,000 instead of $430,000,000 of present face debt if $1.69 must be paid for each $1 of face value to make good on gold bonds. Until the issue is settled, he said, reorganization of the road is held up.

At one point, White said Chief Justice Hughes had "intimated" in one opinion that the general welfare part of the Constitution was controlling. Laughter rang out through the court as the Chief Justice, smiling broadly, emphatically denied that he had ever made any such intimation about power being derived from the preamble to the Constitution.

Speaks for Bondholders.

James H. McIntosh, representing bondholders, led the attack yesterday on the validity of the congressional resolution "repudiating" the gold clauses. He argued that if gold is not paid the bondholders are entitled to $1.69 for each $1 of face value on gold bonds. His argument assumed that bondholders were losing something if paid only dollar for dollar, and that the Missouri Pacific would thereby pocket or distribute this something saved. Nobody questioned his conception of what a dollar is—or advanced the view that $1.69 would exchange for vastly more than what the dollar originally loaned by the bondholder would buy at the time it was loaned.

Throughout much of the argument, two ideas of what a dollar is clashed—one conception that a dollar is always a dollar, the other that it should be measured by what it will buy.

The hearing will go on today.

general belief that the 400 square miles of French Somaliland fronting on the entrance to the Red Sea had much greater importance than the 44,500 square miles of French territory in Central Africa to be added to Italy's Libya.

The Somaliland grant commands the Strait of Bab-el-Mandes, linking the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden, and puts Italy almost on equal footing with France and Great Britain in policing and controlling the strait.

In France, the transfer of the territory to Italy was considered a compromise on the promises which France made Italy in 1915 in return for Italy's quitting the alliance with Germany and Austro-Hungary and entering the World War on the side of France.

Comment of England.

London, Jan. 9 (AP).—A British spokesman said today he regarded as "wild" any idea that Italy, by acquiring new African territory from France, had also acquired a talking point in any future negotiations with Great Britain through the command of the southern approaches to the Suez Canal.

It was pointed out that Great Britain has the island of Perin, just off the newly-acquired land, and also holds British Somaliland in that proximity.

London Reported Cool Toward French Plan

London, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—Financial London was cool tonight to France's reported intention of broaching stablization of the pound sterling in relation to the franc late this month.

The quesion, it was said, would be brought up by French Premier Flandin and Foreign Minister Laval when they come here to discuss the arms convention, the Rome agreements, Franco-British trade facilities and an Eastern European pact.

Such initiative on the part of France presently would be doomed to failure, according to experts, who recalled the warning delivered in the House of Commons on December 21 by Neville Chamberlain. The chancellor of the exchequer said the dollar and the franc would have to be brought into greater harmony with each other before England can consider international stabilization of currencies.

Coran died January 3, 1934, after a life devoted, since the war, to the interests of veterans organizations throughout the country. He was on Gen. Pershing's staff in France, and served in the Veterans' Administration for a number of years.

Criminal Drive On Section 7 (a) Violators Set

(Associated Press.)

The Administration today was preparing to begin criminal court action against employers found to have discharged employes for union activity.

The Justice Department probably will ask Federal grand juries for a number of criminal indictments within a few weeks, it was said yesterday in an authoritative quarter.

So far, punishment for violation of the recovery act's ban on discrimination against union members has been confined to Blue Eagle removal.

Enforcement Cases Up.

The Government has gone to court in Section 7 (a) cases only twice, and then to seek enforcement of Labor Board orders, not punishment of violators.

Two companies the board found to have violated Section 7 (a) already have gone to court to try to stop the first punishment the board ordered for them—Blue Eagle removal.

Both the Ames-Baldwin-Wyoming Shovel Co., of Parkersburg, W. Va., and the Ely Walker Co. of St. Louis asked the District of Columbia Supreme Court to enjoin NRA from taking their code compliance insignia.

Violation of 7(a) is a misdemeanor, punishbale by a maximum finef of $500 for each offense, with each day's violation considered a separate offense. The controverted section sets forth labor's collective bargaining rights.

Secretary Perkins indicated at her press conference yesterday that the Administration might start a new move toward a truce between the steel industry and its union labor.

Such a move, she let it beknown, might result from a study, Labor Department lawyers are making of the suit against the Steel Labor Board filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals by counsel for the employes representation plan committees at the Carnegie Steel Co.'s Duquesne, Pa., and McDonald, Ohio, plants.

Miss Perkins said that "some" felt the steel industry's order to recognize the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers as representative of its members might lead to "a short cut to a desirable end, real collective bargaining."

I'm Alone Case Ends With U. S. Held in Error

Canada Wins an Apology and $25,000; Crew Is Granted $25,666.

(Associated Press.)

The ghost of the rum runner I'm Alone was laid yesterday by a final judicial ruling that Canada should receive an apology and $25,000, the captain and crew $25,666, but that the United States could cross off the rest of the $386,803 demanded in damages.

The American-Canadian Judicial Commission, bringing one of prohibition's most spectacular episodes nearer conclusion, declared the sinking of the vessel was "not justified."

"The commissioners consider," said the decision, "that the United States ought formally to acknowledge its illegality, and to apologize to His Majesty's Canadian Government therefor; and, further, that as a material amend in respect of the wrong the United States should pay the sum of $25,000 to His Majesty's Canadian Government; and they recommend accordingly."

Crew Awarded $25,666.

The commissioners—Justice Willis Van Devanter, of the United States Supreme Court, and Chief Justice Sir Lyman Poore Duff, of the Canadian Supreme Court—decided further that the captain and crew were not parties to the smuggling conspiracy and hence were entitled to "material amends." These added up to $25,666.

Canada has asked for damages of nearly $400,000 for the sinking which took place in the Gulf of Mexico March 22, 1929, after more than an hour of shelling by the Coast Guard cutter Dexter.

Recent hearings here were devoted to a determination of ownership. Canada claimed the schooner was of bona fide Canadian registry, but the United States contended that its operations were dominated by a New York rum-running syndicate.

Rules on Ownership.

The commission yesterday declared that although it was a British ship of Canadian registry, it "was de facto owned, controlled, and at critical times managed, and her movements directed and her cargo dealt with and disposed of, by a group of persons acting in concert who were entirely, or nearly so, citizens of the United States."

George J. Hearn, of Montreal, testified at the hearing that he owned the boat through control of the Eugene Creaser Shipping Co., Ltd., of Nova Scotia.

Saying that he had once jumped bail when indicted in the United States on a liquor charge, he revealed that the actual operations of the vessel were handled by Dan Hogan, of New York, and the late Marvin J. (Big Jim) Clark, a roving former convict, on a profit-sharing plan.

Captain Wins $7,906.

Capt. John T. Randell, a British naval hero, who embarked on the expedition with an opera hat, full dress suit, and other accoutrements of a socialite, declared he had been commercially ostracized since the incident and that he had been ill for nine months because of it.

The commission recommended he be given $7,906. Other suggested awards for the seamen were: Amanda Mainguy, whose husband, Leon, was drowned in the disaster, $10,185; for the representatives of John Williams, deceased, $1,250.50; for the representatives of Williams Wordsworth, deceased, $907; Jens Jansen, $1,098; James Barrett, $1,032; Eddie Young, $999; Chesley Hobbs, $1,323; Edward Fouchard, $965.

State Department officials today said they had no funds for payment of such awards and that a congressional appropriation would be necessary.

Although no action had been taken tonight, officials indicated the matter of an apology to Canada would be taken care of through a formal note, delivered through the American Minister to Canada or through the Canadian Ministry here.

D. C. Grand Jury Retur Twelve Indictments

The newly formed District grand jury yesterday returned 12 indictments to Justice Oscar R. Luhring in the District supreme court. The jurors reported one case in which they believed there was insufficient evidence upon which to base a charge.

Those indicted were: James C. Rowe, and William W. Robertson, housebreaking and larceny; Wilbert Howell, joy-riding, housebreaking and larceny; John F. Botto, Leon Steinberg, and Stephen R. Gates, joy-riding; James I. Haley, Melvin Crutcher, and Clarence Jackson, robbery; John W. Carter, receiving stolen property; Benjamin F. Dixon, assault with a dangerous weapon; and William H. Fugitt and Fay Isabella Highfill, abortion.

Army Bombers Fly Above Sea of Fog

'We're Aground,' He Shouts When Washington Monument No Longer Can Be Seen; 'We've Got a Dog,' Says the Little Wife, Bitterly.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

'Sa terrible experience, being lost in the fog, in Washington.

Funny how it all started. Really, it was quite simple. Seems Washington isn't used to fogs since Hoover's day, and so the boss called us up and said: "We gotta' cover this fog and it's up to you. You're the foggiest reporter we've got, so go out and get lost. It won't be hard—for you." We thought he said doggiest, so we went. We got lost, all right.

"You can't go out in this awful fog," said the good wife, whose name is Gertrude, "you mustn't leave us now."

"'Tis duty calls," we said bravely, dusting our compass and putting on our sou'wester. "We who go down to the sea in ships fear not this murk. To us, 'tis nothing. Starboard the helm and let us be off. Our boss says our public demands we write of fog."

"You haven't got any public," said Gertrude, but she's just the wife, so we let that pass, having learned from assiduous reading of Ring Lardner how to treat wives in just such a crisis as this.

Is Zat So?

Steering a course that was true nothe-east by east (and if that's changed to nor'east we'll know there ain't a good sailor on the copy desk), we set out. We made pretty good time of it, on an ebb tide.

It was pretty thick, at that. We hadn't realized how thick it was until we were passing the State Department building and whether you believe it or not, that architectural monstrosity looked rather pretty in the fog. The fog, of course, was so thick we couldn't see the building. We knew where we were by the musty odor that hung heavy in the air.)

"Port the helm" we shouted, after a few minutes had passed. We hadn't checked with the patent log, else perhaps we would have steered clear of the White House lawn. But that's where we landed, hard aground.

"Sayay! Whadda you think you're doing in here?" a broad-beamed, blue-painted towboat was hailing us through the murk.

Lighthouse Ahead!

After an exchange of pleasantries we were towed off the bank, the tide having turned. And then it was that we knew we were lost. We sent a man aloft, but he couldn't spot the Washington Monument anywhere, but he did report hearing a bell buoy about three points off the port bow. That made us believe we were off Hains Point.

We were, a long way off. We were near Alexandria, only we didn't know it then. There still being plenty of water under our keel we kept going.

By and by a slight breeze came up, clearing the air and also our head, somewhat. So we went up on deck. And that's how we knew where we were. Dead ahead was a lighthouse, a Greek lighthouse, looming in all its majesty out of the fog. It took us only a short time to make port and the first thing we did was call Gertrude, she's the wife.

"Darling," we said, "We've made a miraculous discovery. We've found out what that Greek lighthouse in Alexandria is for. It's in case you have a fog."

"We've got a dog," she snapped, "and don't darling me. I'll bet you're out with your public, the hussy. Here I am all alone at home worrying about you and you're taking your public out in the fog to see a Greek lighthouse. You'd better get into the office, before I come after you."

Sadly we hung up. And went into the office—by bus. Convinced that fogs really have no right to come up the Potomac to Washington.

Johnston Appointed Aid to Morgenthau

Oscar Johnston, of Scott, Miss., manager of the 1933 cotton producers' pool, yesterday was appointed assistant to Secretary Morgenthau of the Treasury. The appointment was made by arrangement between Morgenthau and Secretary Wallace of the Agriculture Department.

Johnston will devote part of his time to the study of agriculture commodity credits. At the same time he will continue with the Agriculture Department as manager of the cotton pool.

The Treasury appointment is for a period of three months.

Incorporation Sought For Trinity College

Trinity College, he said, is the last major educational institution in Washington to seek incorporation. It now operates under a congressional charter.

Five men were believed to have perished when a small boat sank amid grinding ice in the Danube River at Ada Huja Island near Belgrade.

Railroad and telegraph traffic throughout Yugoslavia was tied up by a 30-hour blizzard and communication with the Dalmatian coast virtually severed. Similar conditions prevailed in Hungary and Austria, where 10 inches of snow fell in 24 hours.

A hurricane which swept the Black Sea for three days left many vessels in distress.

A heavy blanket of fog settled down over southern England tonight. Two air liners from the continent were forced down before they reached Croydon Airport.

Unusual cold was reported in Rome and Paris. Even the French Riviera, where tourists seek refuge from winter's rigors, suffered from piercing cold winds, accompanied by a light snow fall.

Steamer Aground.

The Norfolk and Washington Steamboat Company's steamer District of Columbia was still aground in the lower Potomac. The two coast guard cutters despatched from Norfolk to assst her were being delayed at the mouth of the river by the fog.

A short break in the thick mist at New York, according to the Associated Press, enabled a dozen liners to sail belatedly or proceed from the lower bay to their piers. The giant "Majestic" of the White Star-Cunard Line was still at anchor close by Ambrose Lightship with the line unwilling to bring her up through the fog. Her sailing for Europe at midnight last night was indefinitely postponed.

Near where the Majestic was at anchor, the liner Resolute, inbound from a cruise, collided with the freighter, Texas Trader. Little damage was done and the Resolute came on up to her pier.

Inflation Fear Is Unfounded, Asserts Roper

Property System Is in No Peril Fundamentally, He Also Declares.

Any fears of inflation that may be retarding business are not well founded, Secretary Roper said yesterday.

"The Administration is not for inflation," he said. "Things are going to be worked out on regular lines. The capitalist system, or, preferably, the personal property system, is in no danger fundamentally."

Roper said that the Nation's leadership is not socialistic, but that it is trying to save the country from socialism.

"There is no intention of dividing wealth," he said. "It is a matter of adjusting income, or what we prefer to call net profits."

Roper said the country is entering a year of readjustment and gradual gains.

"I don't see how gains this year can be anything but gradual and permanent," he said.

U. S. Moves to Halt Arizona in Dam Case

Solicitor General J. Crawford Biggs yesterday asked the Supreme Court to permit the Government to file an action against the State of Arizona to restrain it from interfering with the construction of Parker Dam on the Colorado River, the Associated Press says. The project is being carried out by the Interior Department.

State troops were called out recently when the agitation over the job became intense.

'I Can Take It!' Vows Reilly, Scolded by Jafsie on Stand

Court Rejects Defense's Plea For a Mistrial

Reich and Condon Grilled at Length; Educator on Stand Again Today.

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 9 (AP).—Al Reich, former prize fighter who was Jafsie's aid and companion during the ransom negotiations, returned to the witness chair in the Hauptmann trial as today's first witness.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz, questioned him.

Reich told of the night of April 2, 1932, when the ransom was paid. He was at Jafsie's Bronx home, he related, with Col. Lindbergh, Col. Breckinridge, Ralph Hacker, Condon's son-in-law; Mrs. Condon, Mrs. Hacker.

He was asked if he drove the car to the ransom payment spot.

"Col. Lindbergh drove the car," he said. "I suggested they use my car." Reich told of the preparation of the $70,000 ransom money in the box ordered by the kidnaper.

"I was there when it was packed. I helped bring it up that afternoon from the banker's home," he detailed, explaining the money was brought to Condon's in two packages, one of $50,000 and one of $20,000.

"That was the afternoon of the night of the final pay-off."

Wilentz then turned the witness over to Edward J. Reilly of defense counsel for cross-examination.

Q. Are you Dr. Condon's bodyguard?—A. No, I just go with him.

Q. Have you any means of income other than as a referee?—A. I own some real estate.

Q. At whose suggestion was the $70,000 brought to Dr. Condon's home?—A. Anything that was done at the time was done with the consent of Col. Lindbergh, Col. Breckinridge and Dr. Condon.

Q. Did you hear Dr. Condon suggest it would be a good idea to have the money in the Bronx?—A. No.

Q. Who knew the money was to be in the Bronx that night?—A. Col. Lindbergh, Col. Breckinridge, Dr. Condon and myself.

Q. So after the money was there in the Bronx, there comes the instruction to pay the money in 30 minutes?—A. Yes.

Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon, who acted as Col. Lindbergh's intermediary, was called to the stand at 10:28 a. m.

Q. How old are you, doctor? A. 74 years of age the first of last June.

Q. And where do you live? A. In the most beautiful borough in the world—the Bronx.

Reads First Ransom Note.

Wilentz read the first communication Jafsie received from the kidnaper.

It read:

No. 6 (Dr. Condon asked to act as intermediary):

"Dear Sir: If you are willing to act as go-between in Lindbergh cace please follow stricly instruction Handel encloced letter personally to Mr. Lindbergh. It will explain everything. Don't tell anyone about it as son as we find out the press or police is notifyd everything are cansell and it will be a further delay. After you gett the money from Mr. Lindbergh put them three words the New-York American money is redy.

"After that we will give you further instruction. Don't be affraid we are not out for your 1000 $ keep it only act stricly. Be at home every night between 6-12 by this time you will hear from us."

There was an inclosed note in that first letter addressed to Col. Lindbergh, designating Condon as the intermediary in the negotiations.

That one read:

No. 5 (acceptance of Dr. Condon as intermediary):

"Dear Sir: Mr. Condon may act as go-between. You may give him the 70000$. Make one packet this size will bee about (drawing of small box).

"We have notifyd you already in what kinds of bills we warn you not to set any trapp in any way. If you or someone els will nitify the police there will be a further delay after we have the mony in hand we will tell you where to find your boy.

"You may have an aerplane redy it is about 150 mil awy. But before telling you the add. a delay of 8 hours will be between."

Condon identified one ransom note as having been received on the night of "about March 9, 1932."

To open the ransom negotiations, Jafsie related how an advertisement was placed in the New York American.

Advertisement Answered.

The ransom notes he left with Col. Lindbergh, he said, and returned to the Bronx.

"Did you get a response to your advertisement?"

"I did. I received another letter by messenger at my front door."

Condon said that on the night he stayed at Lindbergh's Hopewell home he slept in the baby's nursery.

Wilentz then read another note:

"Dear sir: We trust you but we will note come in your haus it is too dangerous even you can not know if police or secret service is watching you.

"Follow this instruction, take a car and drive to the last subway station from Jerome ave. line. 100 feet from the last station on the left seide is a empty frankfurther stand with a big open porch around. You will find a notise in senter of the porch underneath a stone. This notise will tell you were to find mas.

"Act accordingly.

"After three-fourths of a houer be on the place bring the mony with you."

He said he followed the ransom instructions.

"I went 100 feet beyond the station to the frankfurter stand. And we stopped there. It was very cold; and the frankfurter stand was not occupied."

Wilentz stopped him to identify a picture.

"That is the exact way the stand looked the night I was there," Jafsie enunciated.

Condon, at length, told how he and Reich finally got to Woodlawn Cemetery. He described the first time he met the ransom collector.

"I saw a handkerchief inside from some one inside the gate being waved. . . . the man was inside the cemetery gate.

"A man put his arm through the bars, which are wide enough to admit a man's arm, entering or retracing. I walked over there and said, 'I see you.'

"The man was standing about 3 feet away on the inside. . . . The gates were closed. About the locking I do not know. . . . The man was John.

"John Is Hauptmann."

"John is Bruno Richard Hauptmann. . . . He said 'Did you got it the money?' . . . I said, 'No, I couldn't bring the money until I saw the package.' . . . About a minute or so I heard a rustle in the leaves. There is a little bit of a parkway on the inside of that gate, and I heard a rustle in that direction. . . . He heard it and said 'There's a cop.'

"He caught ahold of the bars and climbed, what I call 'Turner' fashion . . . up to the top of that fence and jumped in front of me. . . .

"'Did you sended the cops?' he asked. I said 'No, I gave you my word that I wouldn't do that, and I kept my word.' He then said, 'it is too dangerous' and started to run in northerly direction.

"He reached 233rd street. I said, 'Hey, come back here. Don't be cowardly.' . . . and . . . 'Here I am a poor school teacher up here in the cemetery and you leaving me here to be drilled . . . you are my guest.' He kept on running . . . I followed him.

"I followed him into a little clump of trees near a shack on the opposite side of the way from the cemetery, and I went over and got ahold of his arm and said, 'Hey, you mustn't do anything like that; you are my guest.' . . . I brought him back—I didn't bring him back, I led him back to the seat by the small shack.

Take Seats on Bench.

"The bench was there, and I led him—I led him back to that bench and asked him to be seated as my guest . . . he accepted the invitation. I put him on my right . . . I put him on my right and sat down with him. I talked to him then for more than an hour.

"I first reprimanded him for going across there again. I said, 'Don't ever do that again. I am square with you and the truth to a kidnaper is the same as the truth to a——' All right . . . yes. He said to me, 'It is too dangerous. Might be 20 years or burn. Would I burn if the baby is dead?'

"Not if you did not have some part in it.' He answered, 'I'm only go between.' . . .

"In order to find out whether he was the proper party or not, I said, 'How am I to know that I am talking to the right man?'

"I trust if this hurts anybody's feelings—I trust that I may be excused. 'The baby was held in the crib by safety pins.' John said that. I had the pins with me, because I took them out of the baby's crib on the night that I slept there. They had been, as nearly as I could judge, to the right and left of where the baby's neck was.

"I took them out first and asked him (Col. Lindbergh) afterward—what they call French leave.

"I asked him how he (John) happened to get into such a scrape as that, a man like he was. I praised him, and I meant it. 'A man like you—what would your mother say if she knew that you were engaged like this?' and he said, 'My mother wouldn't like it; she would cry.' Just like that, as nearly as I can imitate it. I am not a good mimic.

"Then I said, 'Leave that, leave that stuff. Come with me.' I then used the words, 'I have a thousand dollars of my own available' didn't say that was all I was worth. I said, 'I have a thousand available.' That is all I had at that time, 'and you can have it.'

"'We don't want your money.'

"'Well, leave them; I will give you that and I will go over to Jersey and collect the rest for you if it is within my power. There are a number of lawyers in my family, and if it is within the law I will get them to go with you to the last degree. But if you fail me, I would follow you to Australia.'

"I suppose I was a little vehement in the matter, but that is what I said to him. He said, 'We won't. You will get that baby and put it in its mother's arms.' That was what I was out for. Then I said, 'Leave them and come.'

"'No.'

"'Why?'

"'The leader would snatch me up.'

"'Excuse me, are you a German?'

"'No, Scandanavian.'

"'Scandanavian? . . . Well, leave them. You will be caught.'

Offers to Be Hostage.

"'Oh no, we were prepared a year before, we were prepared to do this.'

"Then he talked about himself . . . He had his coat up this way (lapels over face) . . . I said, 'You have nothing to be afraid of. I have been square all my life and I am square now. You have nothing to fear from me. Take down that coat.'

"'Well.'

"'Well, nothing. Your fabric is too thin. I have got two coats, I will give you one if you are in want.' And then he coughed. It was what they call a hollow cough. I don't want to imitate that. I said, 'the inroads of pulmonary disease . . . let me go over and get you some medicine. I will do anything I can to straighten this matter out, anything. I will go as hostage to the man . . . that has the baby. Let me go.'

"He said, Hostage? Oh.'

"'What I mean, I will go and stay there until you get the money. . . . I have three toys belonging to the baby and there are three words I know the baby knows' . . . I got the toys from Col. Lindbergh, at my request. I said if he (John) would take me to where the baby was I would know if it was the real baby. 'Please give me a chance. I promised Mr. Lindbergh, Col. Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh, to help them get their baby. That is what I am out for. Nobody else.'

"'Nobody else shall ever get the baby but you, and you can put that baby's arms around Mrs. Lindbergh's neck,' and I believed it.

"'How on earth could I get you if you wouldn't take me to where the baby is?' Again he said, 'They would smack you down. The leader wouldn't stand for it. How could I tell you know? . . . There is a point there and on that point I will stand and signal you a boat. They will see my signal and Col. Lindbergh can get his plane and go right up there.'

"'You couldn't walk there.'

"He said I couldn't get there anyway but by plane, but Col. Lindbergh would take his plane and get there. . . . I did not get to see the child and he said he wouldn't ever propose it, that they would drill him. I said, 'Well, you mustn't be afraid of anything like that, do what you think is right, while you have got time, for your mother's sake.'

"Baby Is All Right."

"He said, 'Maybe you think we are not the ride—' the 'd' was accented on that more than the 't' in righteousness and right, and so on. He said, 'We are the ride parties. I will send you the slipping suit of the baby. Tell Col. Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh that the baby is all right.'

"'All right, then, you will send me the baby's sleeping suit.'

"'Yes, I vaited (sic) too long already.'

"I said, 'Well, it is so important, what are you going to do?'

"'I will send you the sleeping suit, I must go.'

"That had been after we talked this way for one hour and—well, 10 minutes, 15 minutes, as nearly as I can remember, and we shook hands and parted. I did not go to catch him. I wanted the baby. I didn't care about catching him."

The next chapter was how the sleeping suit arrived at his Bronx home, in accordance with "John's" promise.

"I opened it in my parlor."

Q. Who was present?—A. Col. Lindbergh and Coll. Breckinride.

The letter which Condon identified as coming with the garment was read by Wilentz. It gave fresh instructions for the negotiations, directing an advertisement be published in a New York paper: "I accept. Money is ready."

Condon told how he placed the ad, after conferring with Col. Breckinridge.

Q. Following that do you receive another letter or note?—A. Yes, I did.

Wilentz carefully read this note, stressing the bad spelling.

The note follows:

"Dear Sir: You and Mr. Lindbergh know ouer program. If you don't accept den we will wait until you agree with ouer deal. We know you have to come to us anyway. But why should Mrs. and Mr. Lindbergh suffer longer as necessary. We will note communicate with you or Mr. Lindbergh until you write so in the paper.

"We will tell you again: this kidnaping cace whas prepared for a year already so the police won't have any looks to find ur or the child. You only puch everyding further out did you send that little package to Mr. Lindbergh it contains the sleepingsuit from the baby. The baby is well."

Jafsie scrutinized the note. Then he said, "Yes, sir, that is the letter I received at my home."

Wilentz asked Condon if he had inserted another ad in the papers as the result of this latest note from John.

A. I did.

Wilentz offered Jafsie a ransom letter postmarked March 29, 1932.

"That is the letter I received," he said.

Wilentz read it:

"Dear sir: It is note necessary to furnish any code. You and Mr. Lindbergh know ouer program very well we will keep the child in our save plase until we have the money in hand but if the deal is note closed until the 8 or April we will ask for 30000 more also note 70000-100000.

"How can Mr. Lindbergh follow so many false clues he knows we are the right party ouer signature is still the same as in the ransom note, but if Mr. Lindbergh likes to fol around for another month we cant help it.

"Once he has to come to us anyway but if he keeps on waiting we will double ouer amount there is absolute no fear about the child. It is well."

Identifies Another Note.

Wilentz gave Condon still another note, which he identified.

It said:

"Dear sir—Have the money ready by Saturday eve we will inform you where and how to deliver it. Have the money in one bundle We want you to put it a sertain place There is no fear that somebody els will take it, we watch everything closely Pleace lett us know if you are agre and ready for action by Saturday evening—if yes put in the paper

"Yes everything OK

"It is a very cimble delivery but we find out very son if there is any trap. After 8 houers you gete the adr. from the boy, on the place you find two ladies. They are innocence.

"If it is to late we put it in the New York American for Saturday morning. Put in New York Journal."

The retired teacher then identified this ad, which said:

"I accept. Money is ready."

That day the ransom money was brought to Condon's Bronx home, "Jafsie" said.

It was on this day, too, he went on, that a note from John was delivered at his home. The note said:

"Dear Sir: Take a car and follow Tremont ave. to the East until you reach the number 3225 East Tremont ave.

"It is a nursery

"Bergen

"Greenhauses florist

"There is a table standing outside right on the door, you find a letter undernead the table covert with a stone read and follow instruction don't speak to anyone on the way. If there is a radio alarm for police car we warn you. We have the same equipment. Have the money in one bundle. We give you ¾ of an houer to reach the place."

Went to the Rendezvous.

Jafsie then began the tale of the ride he and Lindbergh took to the ransom payment rendezvous.

On the night of April 2, 1932, he said, he and the colonel set out in an auto shortly after receiving a note and proceeded to Bergen's Greenhouse across from the cemetery.

"I went over to the table as directed in the note specified and picked up a stone, took a note from under it and read it," he said. "I then went over to the automobile where Col. Lindbergh was seated."

Q. Did you talk to the colonel there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Exhibit the note to him? A. showed him the note * * * I walked across the street following the directions in the note. When I got across the other side, I went almost nearly at right angles in an easterly direction and came to a corner. On that corner there was a man and a little girl, respectively. The little girl seemed to be about 12 years of age and I said, 'Could you tell me where Wittemore avenue is?' The answer was 'No, we are strangers here.'

"I walked along East Tremont avenue on the southerly side and went along in an easterly direction past the entrance and gate.

"I went maybe 100 yards east of that gate. I saw no one and came back again to the meeting of Whittemore street or avenue and Tremont avenue, and stood there and said, 'There does not seem to be anybody here. I will go over to see the colonel.'

"Then I went to turn away; maybe about 10 feet, 15 feet, and someone said, in a very loud, clear tone, 'Hey, Doktor, over here!'

"I walked toward that voice. It came from the mound of St. Raymond's Cemetery, about 10 feet above the level where I was standing. I followed the voice and it repeated again in a lower tone, but I could hear it. It was a still night. I heard it plainly, 'Over here.'

"I said, 'All right.' And I followed down that street. From the light going down that street, it was exceedingly dark, and I walked exceedingly cautiously. I went about 10 feet, and there again the same voice as I heard when I was up on the corner when he called, 'Hey, Doktor.'"

Q. Then what?—A. He said "Have you got the money?" The same as he said the night I met him at Woodlawn cemetery.

"I said, 'Col. Lindbergh has it,'" Condon continued.

"He said, 'Is he on?'

"I said 'I don't know.'

"He said, 'Give me the money.'

"I said, 'Not till you give me a receipt—beg pardon—a note, saying we'll get the baby.'

"I said, 'Col. Lindbergh is not so rich. Why don't you be decent to him?'

"'Well, I suppose if we can't get 70, we'll take 50. In 10 minutes I get the note and come back.'"

He told how he returned to Col. Lindbergh, and got the box containing $50,000, Lindbergh first removing the additional $20,000 which had been brought along.

He returned to the rendezvous at the hedge, he went on.

Q. What happened then?—A. He was crouched down under the hedge. I said "Come on, stand up like a man, I have the money." I said "Come on, give me the note." He put his hand in a coat pocket. I could look on him as he was crouching there, and I said "Give me the note."

Jafsie said he started to depart to bring the sealed note to Lindbergh.

"Vait," "John" cried, Jafsie testified.

"John" then took the money out of the box to make sure it was "all right," he explained.

Condon told of the ransom payment.

"He said 'all of them said your work was perfect.'

"I said 'there is no other way to act. The truth should be told to a kidnaper as well as a judge.'

"He said 'the crowd thinks you're fine.'

"I said 'if you're giving me a chance to get that baby, it's all right. If not, I'll follow you to Australia.'

"Then he said 'good night,' and I said 'good night, John.'"

Wilentz then asked him, "Who is 'John?'"

Directed to Boat.

After Condon's identification of Hauptmann for the third time, the note instructing searchers to go to a boat was read to the jury. It was:

"The boy is on boad Nelly it is a small boad 28 feet long two persons are on the boad the are innosent. You will find the boad between Horseneck Beach and Gayhead near Elisabeth Island."

Q. Where did you go?—A. Down to Seventieth street near Central Park West. It was the late Senator Morrow's library.

Q. From Senator Morrow's where did you go?—A. We went in an auto to Bridgeport.

Q. Traveling through the night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who drove the car?—A. Col. Lindbergh.

Jafsie said the party arrived at Bridgeport about 4 or 5 a. m. and left again at daybreak.

Q. What did your party do then? A. We went in an airplane from Bridgeport to the vicinity of Gay Head.

Q. Did Col. Lindbergh find his baby?—A. No.

Q. Did you find the boat Nellie? A. No.

Q. Did Col. Lindbergh find the boat Nellie?—A. No.

Q. Who piloted the plane? A. Col. Charles E. Lindbergh.

Jafsie gave the wrong middle initial for the Nation's most celebrated aviator.

"Jafsie" said that after the search he wrote to "John."

"I wrote 'What is wrong? Have you double-crossed me?'"

Q. Did you get any answer?—A. I received no response.

Q. Did you see "John" again?—A. Yes, I saw him near the Williamsburg Bridge section of New York. I was on a bus and he was walking in the opposite direction. I did not pursue him, because he went into a woods.

He said that was in August, 1934.

Q. Did you give the description of John to police long, long before Hauptmann was arrested?—A. Yes, sir, about two years before.

Jafsie Cross-Examined.

On cross-examination Reilly asked Condon if he was a gentleman of leisure.

"Never had a day of leisure in my life," said the doctor.

Q. Are you familiar with a camp at a place called Beckett?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where's that?—A. Massachusetts.

Q. Were you there early in the spring of 1932?—A. Yes, sir. Within a few days of Decoration—with Walter Goodwin.

Reilly asked him if he knew a man named Broadhurst owned the camp. Jafsie said he did not.

During a dispute over a statement Reilly charged Condon had made in Massachusetts recently, the defense counsel moved for withdrawal of a juror and a mistrial.

Reilly said "at least one juror was influenced."

Reilly asked Condon if in "Mr. Dunnigan's drug store there he did not say that "we have not yet discovered 'John.'"

"And didn't you say," Reilly added "that you would be willing to give $10,000 to find him?"

"Are you finished?" Condon asked.

"Yes," said Reilly.

"There was no such thing," Condon replied.

Wilentz interrupted here to say he had a letter from the druggist.

It was here that Reilly upset the court with his motion for dismissal of the jury.

Justice Trenchard promptly denied it, and asked that it be disregarded.

The dispute between Reilly and Condon was prefaced by a sharp exchange of bitter remarks, of which this is typical:

Q. You're enjoying your day in the sun, aren't you, Dr. Condon?—A. I refuse to answer unless this man (Reilly) speaks English.

Reilly switched to Jafsie's recent Miami trip and asked if he had seen reporters there.

"Plenty of them."

Q. Did you tell them Hauptmann was not John?—A. No, sir (emphatically).

At this point all the usual court formality of conduct between attorney and witness went by the board as Jafsie leaned forward in his chair and openly lectured Reilly.

When he stopped for a minute he turned to Justice Trenchard.

"Is that too severe?" he inquired.

The outburst came when Reilly heckled the witness relentlessly, calling upon Jafsie to announce that he had said Hauptmann was innocent.

"I Want to Be Honest."

Reilly demanded why he had never announced he had identified Hauptmann until today.

"A man's life is at stake and I want to be honest."

"If you wanted to be honest, why didn't you announce your identification?" A. Because I did not wish to interfere in the case.

Condon was asked why he entered the Lindbergh case, and he said to "rescue from suspicion Arthur Johnson, a deck hand on a yacht."

Q. And why should you? You are an M. A. from Fordham, a B. A. from City College of New York, a Doctor of Pedagogy in New York University, why should you take it upon yourself to rescue an inconspicuous Danish deck hand? A. I'll tell you why, I always hated to see an underdog.

Reilly demanded if the educator did not know that everybody in the Lindbergh home but Col. and Mrs. Lindbergh was under suspicion.

"I never had the slightest suspicion of anyone in the household."

Q. Have you ever heard of New Rochelle (U. Y.) College? A. Yes, I lectured there.

Q. In 1932?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever seen this young lady at the College of New Rochelle?

Reilly handed him a picture. Condon examined it.

Her Identity Withheld.

The identity of the photographed young woman was not made known. State officials did not know if it were Violet Sharpe, the Morrow maid who committed suicide. Reilly has tried in previous cross-examination of witnesses to find a link between her and Jafsie.

Reilly had him identify the first ransom letter.

Q. Of course you read it.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you turn over to the authorities every letter you received during the ransom negotiations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember getting two letters with some symbols like those on the ransom notes, which you haven't seen in court?—A. I turned them all over to Col. Schwarzkopf in New Jersey and Inspector Bruckman in the Bronx.

Q. How did you indicate they should communicate with you, a box number or your name and address?—A. Yes, sir; my name and address.

Q. Of course you didn't know the kidnapers?—No.

Q. There was no letter up to the time you telephoned to Col. Lindbergh?—A. No, that was the first one.

Q. Then you went down to Col. Lindbergh's home?—A. Yes, Melton Gaglio and Mr. Rosenheim also went with me.

Reilly led Condon into a detailed description of his ride to the Bronx frankfurter stand where one ransom note was found.

Q. You got out of the car?—A. I did.

Q. Reich stayed in the car?—A. He did.

Q. How big was the rock under which you found the note?—A. Bigger than your fist.

Q. The envelope wasn't stamped? A. No.

When Reilly suggested an adjournment, before going on to the third ransom note received by Jafsie, the witness looked at Wilentz, shook his head in vigorous protest, pleading.

"No. No. Let him go on."

Secret 3 Bound To Flemington From Abroad

Witnesses' Identity Closely Guarded; They May Be Fisch Relatives.

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—The S. S. Ile de France sped toward the United States tonight with three mysterious witnesses, their identity closely guarded, to testify in the murder trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

Amid elaborate precautions to insure secrecy, the three witnesses, accompanied by Detective Arthur Johnson, who has been investigating German angles of the Hauptmann case, boarded the ship a few minutes before she sailed this morning.

Port authorities said Johnson had requested they not reveal the names or nationalities of his companions. The group, registered as Johnson "and party," were said to have taken tourist class accommodations, a move believed to be designed to insure secrecy.

Meeanwhile, in Flemington, N. J., Attorney General David T. Wilentz said Johnson's companions would testify, but he could not disclose their names. He denied the State was bringing Henry (Red) Johnson, sailor friend of Betty Gow, former nurse of the Lindbergh baby.

There were reports that Johnson's party consisted of Paul, Pinkus and Hannah Fisch, brothers and sister of the late Isidor Fisch, former Bronx furrier, from whom Hauptmann said he received the Lindbergh ransom money.

Johnson Willing to Return.

Oslo, Norway, Jan. 9 (AP).—Henry Johnson, located here today, asserted he was willing to return to the United States to testify in the Hauptmann trial at Flemington, N. J., if his fare were paid.

The erstwhile friend of Betty Gow, Lindbergh baby's nurse, was living in humble surroundings. In hard straits financially, he has been selling fruit at an open air stand.

"I am no longer engaged to Betty Gow," the one-time sailor said. "I have a fiancee in Oslo now."

Johnson had changed his name to Finn Johansen in an effort to avoid publicity growing out of the Lindbergh kidnaping.

Women's 'Tips' Send Federals Hunting Karpis

Slaying of Gibson Spurs Agents in Drive for Other Kidnapers.

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—Federal marksmen, victorious in their first battle against members of the Karpis-Baker abduction ring, followed an apparently warm trail today in their efforts to apprehend the entire mob.

With one of the gang men slain by Government agents and another a closely guarded prisoner, the agents combed the city for Alvin Karpis, Arthur "Doc" Baker and the henchmen who aided them in the $200,000 kidnaping of Edward G. Bremer, St. Paul bank president and brewery head.

It was learned the operatives had definite information concerning the whereabouts of the outlaws they sought. It was believed the leads were furnished by several unnamed women they captured last night in a sensational raid on a hideout frequented by the fugitives.

Strengthening the belief a wholesale roundup was imminent was the activity of Harold Nathan, assistant director of the division of investigation of the Department of Justice. He arrived last night from St. Louis to take charge of the important case.

Shortly afterward 16 agents surrounded a North Side flat, Russell "Rusty" Gibson, 32, Southwestern desperado and suspect in the Bremer kidnaping, attempted to blast his way through the blockade. His machine gun jammed. He ran into the Federal fire. One bullet grazed his head. A rifle slug tore through his bullet-proof vest. He died several hours later at a hospital.

Meanwhile, the other agents bombed the women and a man identified as Byron Bolton, 32-year-old former sailor and minor member of the mob, from the apartment with tear gas.

Gibson was charged with handling some of the Bremer ransom money under the aliases of Roy Gray, Glen Gray and Smith in the indictment returned against 11 persons in the case. He also was wanted for the $75,000 holdup of a bank messenger in Oklahoma City.

'Plotters' Free College Youth

'Let Him Go Because I Couldn't Pay,' Says Father.

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—Allen C. Bomberger slumbered peacefully at his Hammond (Ind.) home today, while Federal agents investigated his reported kidnaping.

The brilliant Wabash College student appeared in Chicago's Loop this morning and told police he had been held by abductors since Sunday night and forced to write two letters to his father demanding payment of $50,000 ransom.

Lowden Bomberger, Hammond attorney, ascribed his son's release to realization by the abductors that they had undertaken an unprofitable venture.

"The plotters decided they had started a bad job and let it go," he stated this afternoon. "I couldn't pay a dime."

He expressed confidence in the youth, although the Chicago police were somewhat puzzled by his fresh appearance when they questioned him at the detective bureau.

Harold Nathan, assistant director of the division of investigation of the Department of Justice, declined to disclose the activities of his operatives, but said:

"A kidnaping has been reported and we are investigating it."

Suggests Private Conference; Doubts Authority of Court to Rule.

Assuming the role of a peacemaker, Justice Peyton Gordon in the District Supreme Court yesterday took steps to bring about a private settlement of the differences between Col. Snowden Fahnestock and his wife, Mrs. Helen Moran Fahnestock.

Abruptly halting cross-examination of Mrs. Fahnestock, Justice Gordon directed opposing counsel to approach his bench. There, in a whispered conversation, he expressed "serious doubts" about his right to make a ruling in the case. He intimated that since neither of the Fahnestocks was a resident of the District, with the further fact that Mrs. Fahnestock now has pending in Rhode Island a divorce suit, he did not believe the local courts had jurisdiction.

The jurist also suggested that the attorneys and their clients attempt to get together and iron out their differences in a private discussion.

Narrowed Battle Lines.

Even if the case is continued today, there will be narrowed lines of battle. After scanning the suits filed by both the Fahnestocks and their answers to each other's allegations, he directed that the attorneys consult together and limit the issues.

Beginning her fight to regain custody of her two children, Clara, 7, and Mary Lee, 6, Mrs. Fahnestock went on the stand to tell of her life with the man who succeeded Maj. Whittlesey in command of the famous "Lost Battalion" and to give her reasons for terming him an unfit person to have the children.

Her husband refused to take the children when he went to play golf, did not take them with him when he went sailing, did not think they were proper companions on his fishing trips, and seldom, if ever, heard them at their evening prayers, Mrs. Fahnestock said in listing her famous husband's alleged omissions as a father.

Sailing Episode.

Claude R. Branch, attorney for Mr. Fahnestock, then brought out that the sailing episode occurred when the children were 3 and 4 years old, respectively, and that they were but slightly older when he thought it best not to take them on a fishing excursion.

At another time, Mrs. Fahnestock revealed she had suggested her husband give the girls "putters" and let them play on the greens of a club where he was golfing. The colonel, she said, didn't think much of the idea.

Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, prominent in Washington society, and mother of Col. Snowden Fahnestock, was an interested spectator. Her expression seldom varied, but there was one remark made by her daughter-in-law that brought a vigorous negative shake of the head.

The remark was that the mother-in-law was "75 years old" and could not properly take care of the children.

During the earlier portion of her testimony, Mrs. Fahnestock admitted there "was one person" she saw a great deal in New York, and from whom she had received letters.

Asked to reveal the contents of the letters she said she had destroyed them, as she had all her mail.

The mother told Justice Gordon she believed it "was a shock" to the children's systems when they were taken from a train at the Union Station at 7 o'clock in the morning last week. She has not seen them since, she declared, but she had been informed they have not been saying their prayers and have not been placed in the children's room on the top floor of the Fahnestock mansion at 2311 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Room for Children.

The explanation for this was that the top floor had not been opened up, but that the children were being cared for on one of the lower floors.

If Col. Fahnestock and his wife are unable to reach an amicable settlement during the night, Justice Gordon said he would be faced with the possibility that the District courts were powerless to act. The children are here only temporarily, he said, and the transitory nature of their visit did not confer the right to say whether the father or the mother should have them.

Attorney Arthur J. Phelan, acting for Mrs. Fahnestock, and Claude Branch, representing the husband, would not discuss last night what plans they had for getting their clients together in a last-minute effort to effect a compromise.

'Ma' Ferguson Urges Legal Liquor in Texas

Austin, Tex., Jan. 9 (AP).—Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson, describing prohibition as a "stupendous failure," proposed today that Texas establish a penalty system for liquor dealers which would yield an estimated $5,000,000 in revenue annually as a stop-gap pending repeal. "It is simply a question," she said, in an address before the Legislature, "of whether we will have legal liquor with taxes or bootleg liquor without taxes."

Mrs. Ferguson, who will retire from office January 15, said the Legislature can provide a fine or penalty equal to what a reasonable tax would be for a license to sell intoxicating liquor.

Two Lawyers Seek Clemency For Murderer

Efforts Launched to Avert Newton's Execution for Killing Woman.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—Two Richmond attorneys, Percy Smith and Gordon Ambler, announced today that they were planning to cooperate in an effort to obtain clemency for Noah Newton, 36, now awaiting his removal to the death house for the killing of Josie Allen, his 44-year-old sweetheart, near Fredericksburg two weeks ago.

Mr. Ambler said that he had the greatest confidence that Judge Frederick Coleman, of Stafford County, would give consideration to a forthcoming appeal for a commutation of Newton's death sentence. He indorsed Mr. Smith's journey to Fredericksburg late today in which the latter will ask the judge to consider the case.

Both men have talked to the prisoner, who is now in Henrico jail, and believe that he was in so much of a daze at the time of his short trial last week that he did not know what he was doing. Newton, who killed the woman because, he said, he could stand her "meddling" no longer, pleaded guilty and asked only that the thing be gotten over with as quickly as possible. He was the first man in Stafford County ever to be sentenced to death without a jury.

There is no possible chance that Newton may be granted a new trial, it was believed here, but Judge Coleman may change the sentence at any time during the February session of his court. Both lawyers said that they believe that the judge had done his duty as he saw it, but that he had not been in possession of all the facts relative to the case.

Newton, a mild little man, saw war service in France and had been in no previous trouble.

Deaths Reach 3 In D. C. Traffic; Aged Man Hurt

Charles Ashby Succumbs; Fog Blamed as Trolley Fails to Stop.

Traffic accidents claimed their third fatality for 1935 in the District yesterday when Charles Ashby, 52, of Cherrydale, Va., died in Emergency Hospital of injuries suffered November 22 when he was struck by an automobile at Connecticut avenue and Porter street.

According to police, the automobile which struck Ashby was operated by Allen R. Crain, of the 2900 block of Tilden street. After the accident Mr. Crain was not held, but he will appear at a coroner's inquest.

Meanwhile an aged man, struck by a street car yesterday at Thomas circle and Fourteenth street, was given slight chance to recover by physicians at Emergency Hospital.

The victim, Franklin C. Jackson, 68, of the 1400 block of Massachusetts avenue, suffered a crushed chest, a possible skull fracture, several fractured ribs and internal injuries when Motorman J. V. Elmore, of Bethesda, Md., was unable to stop the car. Elmore was not held. Fog was blamed for the accident.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald held an inquest yesterday in the death of Roger Du Bois, 30, of Ferndale, Mich., killed in a collision September 15. Wilfred Jones, 32, of the 1400 block of Hamlin street northeast, described as the driver of the car in which Du Bois was a passenger, was held for the grand jury.

Fines for traffic violations since December 31 already exceed $5,500, it was revealed at Traffic Court yesterday.

Violators continued to be haled into court before Judge Isaac Hitt yesterday, and the collateral list showed 58 persons released on 67 charges, with 5 others locked up.

Georgia Mill Strike Facing Crisis Today

Rossville, Ga., Jan. 9 (AP).—With nine persons already under military arrest for night riding, National Guardsmen tonight prepared to prevent violence at tomorrow's expected crisis in the union strike at the Richmond Hosiery Mills here.

The arrest of six persons today, together with three taken into custody yesterday and 25 interned Monday at the National Guard Armory in Atlanta, brought the total of arrests to 34. Attempts at arbitration having failed, the mill operators' announcement that new employes will be engaged tomorrow for the jobs of all strikers not reporting to work is expected to bring a showdown.

He also confessed to police to robbing the study of the Rev. Dr. F. Berry Plummer during church services.

Police Conduct War on Nip Joints Of Winchester

Winchester, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—"Nip joints," reported flourishing in some Virginia cities since the advent of the liquor dispensaries, are operating on a smaller scale in Winchester, according to the statements of police.

In an effort to stamp out the sale of illegal liquor, numerous raids have been made on dwellings where liquor allegedly is sold but in no instance has more than a small quantity been found, indicating, officers say, that it is being sold by the "nip" or drink.

Efforts to secure evidence are frustrated in many instances by the destruction of the liquor which is poured hastily into sinks or into containers in which has been placed disinfectant to destroy the liquor odor.

Illicit liquor, the officers report, is being sold for 50 cents per quart, considerably cheaper than tax paid liquor.

Cumberland Pupil's Marriage Is Annulled

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—The marriage of Sarah Catherine Bartlett, local schoolgirl, to James Ray Rhodes, of Dunbar, Pa., was annulled yesterday in an order signed by Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan in the circuit court.

Suit for annullment was docketed by Mrs. Lola Bartlett, this city, in behalf of her minor daughter. Mrs. Bartlett alleged that Rhodes, in 1933, induced Sarah, a 14-year-old South End school student, to hide her books and go to a Baltimore street store. While the girl waited, Rhodes obtained a marriage license, swearing the girl was 18 and he was 21 years of age. They were married by the Rev. D. H. Steffens. Following the marriage, the mother of the girl-bride charged that Rhodes never worked but obtained $200 from the young wife, left the city, and never provided a home for his wife.

Fairview's Proud! Little Andy Monn Called Dad by 17

Waynesboro, Pa., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—A Hagerstown family may rightfully boast of a family of 15 children, but Fairview, a hamlet, north of here, is proud of Andrew D. Monn, father of 17 children.

Living at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains, "Little Andy" (so called because of his small stature) has a hobby of catching snakes. He handles them with impunity. He never wears an overcoat.

Roosevelt Firm For Oil Control Despite Ruling

Unperturbed by Decision of High Court; Regards It as Technicality.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Unperturbed by the Supreme Court's adverse decision on the oil section of the recovery act, President Roosevelt is undeterred from his general purpose of maintaining Government control over such a vast national resource as it represented in the oil fields.

This was the substance of his reaction yesterday when asked for an opinion on the Supreme Court's ruling on Monday, holding that Congress had delegated authority too carelessly, in the case of oil, by giving the President too wide a latitude for action.

Interpreting the decision as largely a matter of language, which can be corrected by Congress, Mr. Roosevelt left no doubt that the Administration intends to stick by this and any other such measures which might be upset because of what he considers mere technicalities.

Cites Nation's Benefits.

In fact, he declared that half a dozen such decisions might be necessary before all requirements of the Supreme Court and the Constitution are satisfied. Meantime, he feels the country has received and is receiving the benefits of these laws while they are undergoing a process of refinement.

Plied on all sides with questions at his biweekly press conference, Mr. Roosevelt illustrated this feeling with a parable.

An upstate New York village had suffered many deaths at a highway crossing, he related. The local elders, wanting to employ a constable, conferred with legal authorities and were advised the town council might adopt a resolution, authorizing this action. This was done, a constable was employed, and traffic lights were installed.

All went well, continued the President, a twinkle in his eye, until 18 months later, when a motorist was arrested for passing a red light. He took his case to court, which held that the resolution was badly drawn; was, in fact, illegal.

Nevertheless, Mr. Roosevelt went on, the village had prevented deaths for a year and a half by this illegal action, and had learned, by virtue of the court's decision, how to draft a resolution correctly. A new, valid resolution was adopted, continuing the constable.

The analogy, Mr. Roosevelt believes, is precise.

Reviews Conditions.

In the first place, he said, conditions in the oil fields were chaotic 18 months ago, when the New Deal stepped in to raise prices and to stabilize employment. And in the year and a half since that time, he remarked, the Government has put the industry in considerably better condition.

One thing Mr. Roosevelt said was certain: that this country is headed for control of such a major necessity as oil. The Supreme Court decision won't prevent that in the long run, nor will it interfere with his own position as quarter back, calling the signals. To another question, the President agreed that "whereases" are cheap, and Congress should make liberal use of them if they add to the legality of new measures.

Asked if the Administration's position might be strengthened if oil were declared a public utility, Mr. Roosevelt remarked that oil possessed many essentials of a public utility, as did coal. He replied that this possibility has been discussed, but that he did not know if it would help.

Meantime, a collapse in prices for crude petroleum appeared inevitable as the immediate aftermath of the Supreme Court decision. Secretary Ickes, the oil administrator, said that the oil code was not affected by the court ruling, but added that it will be ineffective in preserving order.

Report of Shipments.

The planning and coordination committee of the oil industry received reports of large shipments from the East Texas field since Monday's decision, and officials believed the present price of crude, about $1 a barrel, would break disastrously. One agent thought "hot oil" might drop to 25, 15, or even 10 cents a barrel.

In an effort to hasten Federal control, Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas, plans to introduce a joint resolution in the Senate today prohibiting oil shipments in excess of State laws. Substitute legislation also will be offered in the House, with sponsors hopeful of early action.

Mr. Roosevelt came to his press conference still feeling the effects of a slight cold. His meeting with newspapermen, postponed from morning to afternoon, was one of only two engagements of the day. He lunched with Roland L. Redmond, general counsel for the New York Stock Exchange, an old friend.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. At drug stores. © 1934 C. M. Co.

As Senate Committee Met to Act on World Court

Senate Group Assures a Test Of World Court

Resolution Ratifying the Protocol Approved by Committee.

alone are yet inherent in the general proposition, and to avoid these, men like myself are against our country joining this part of the League of Nations."

Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, another foe of World Court adherence, however, withheld comment, except to express pleasure that the committee had preserved the purpose of the former reservation No. 5.

Senator Robinson held that "the legal import and effect of Reservation 5 has been preserved in full."

The chief controversy over American adherence to the World Court has centered over the giving of advisory opinions by the tribunal. Under the statute creating the court, the league council of assembly may request the court for an advisory opinion.

Thus it has been feared that the league, of which the United States is not a member, might request an advisory opinion regarding a question in which this country has an interest over the objection of this Government. To guard against that contingency the Senate in ratifying the World Court protocol in 1926 adopted Reservation 5, forbidding the court to render an advisory opinion on a question in which the United States had or claimed an interest, without this country's consent.

The form of the resolution was unacceptable to the signatories to the World Court protocol and after several years of negotiations, the Root-Hurst protocol was drafted in 1929 and accepted by the State Department. Since then it has been the subject of fighting in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, proponents of the protocol contending it safeguards the United States and its opponents arguing that it does not.

The committee yesterday voted down, 12 to 9, Senator Johnson's proposal, which in effect would require approval by the Senate before the United States could be a party to any controversy before the World Court. It also rejected, 11 to 9, a proposal by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, specifying that the United States was not relinquishing its traditional policy of nonentangling alliances and its attitude toward purely American questions.

A proposal by Senator J. Hamilton Lewis (Democrat), of Illinois, withholding from league or World Court jurisdiction local and domestic questions and questions relating to the Monroe Doctrine also was rejected, 15 to 5.

Those voting to report the resolution of ratification in the form finally approved were Senators Pittman (Nevada), Robinson (Arkansas), Black (Alabama), Harrison (Mississippi), Wagner (New York), Connally (Texas), Thomas (Utah), Van Nuys (Indiana), Duffy (Wisconsin), Pope (Idaho) and Bulkley (Ohio)—all Democrats. Republicans voting to report the resolution were Senators Capper (Kansas) and Vandenberg (Michigan).

Those voting against the resolution were Senators Lewis (Illinois), Murray (Montana), Democrats, and Borah (Idaho), Johnson (California) and Cuttting (New Mexico), Republicans. Senator Henrik Shipstead (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota, and Senator Robert M. La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, also voted against the resolution.

Text of Resolution on World Court As Adopted by Senate Committee

Text of the resolution ratifying American adherence to the World Court protocols favorably reported yesterday to the Senate by its Foreign Relations Committee was as follows:

Whereas the President, under date of December 10, 1930, transmitted to the Senate a communication, accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of State, dated November 18, 1929, asking the favorable advice and consent of the Senate to adherence by the United States to the protocol of date of December 16, 1920, of signature of the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice, the protocol of revision of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice of date September 14, 1929, and the protocol of accession of the United States of America to the protocol of signature of a statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice of date September 14, 1929, all of which are set out in the said message of the President dated December 10, 1930: Therefore be it

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), that the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to said three protocols, the one of date December 16, 1920, and the other two, each of date September 14, 1929 (without accepting or agreeing to the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction), with the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

Old Postoffice Or New? Choice Given Staunton

Chamber of Commerce to Decide on Whether to Remodel.

The Treasury yesterday put up to the Staunton, Va., Chamber of Commerce the decision on whether that city gets a new postoffice or the old one is to be rebuilt and enlarged, according to the Associated Press.

A set of plans for the proposed new building provided by the Treasury were forwarded late yesterday by Representative Robertson, of Lexington, to the chamber's public buildings committee. Plans for the enlargement will be sent to Staunton within a few days.

In providing the drawings for both proposals, the Treasury said the proposed new two-story structure would better suit the Government's needs than would a remodeled structure but expressed willingness to remodel if that is what Staunton wants.

The Staunton chamber has advised the Treasury that for sentimental reasons local interests are opposed to tearing down the old building. It has been in use a half century.

Both plans would come within the $110,000 allotment for the building.

Wooden Gun Convicts Trapped Inside Walls

Boston, Jan. 9 (AP).—Four convicts who slugged two guards in an attempt to escape from State prison, and used fake guns similar to that of the late John Dillinger in his sensational escape from Crown Point, Ind., prison, were captured today before they got outside the prison walls.

Two of the four, Joseph Levesque, of New Bedford, and Thaddeus Zakrewski, of Worcester, were captured on a prison wall shortly after the alarm sounded. The others, Lawrence Baldway, 26, of Warehouse Point, Conn., and William Baker, 19, of Springfield, were found in the prison laundry.

De Priest 'Broke,' Looking for a Job

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—Oscar De Priest, white-haired colored leader and former Republican Congressman, today asserted he was "penniless and looking for a job."

De Priest appeared in debtors' court on a citation to submit to an examination to determine whether he had assets to pay a $38 judgment obtained against him by a stationery supply store.

Joseph Mockus, jr., attorney for the creditor, said De Priest told him he had paid $1,500 on a Government income tax bill, and all of his other money had gone to pay expenses of his campaign last fall, in which he was defeated by Arthur Mitchell, also colored.

"We found he has no assets," Mockus said.

Whew! Close!

He Tossed $300 Into Field, Lost It for While, Then Found It.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—William Huff is feeling much better, physically and mentally, today.

Last night while walking to his home in the suburbs, he stumbled over a wire stretched by two thugs, who pounced upon him after one had struck him over the head with the butt of a revolver. Huff leaped free and started to run. At the same time he tossed his wallet, which contained $300 in cash and valuable papers, into a field. The bandits overtook him and rifled his pockets, only to find a few cents in change.

After notifying the authorities a search was started for the wallet, which could not be found. Huff spent an uncomfortable night until the wallet, with valuables intact, was found today where he had tossed it.

Huff has recovered from the head blow.

Strikers Derail Train With Bomb in Illinois

Waltonville, Ill., Jan. 9 (AP).—Another railroad bombing early today, the fourteenth since last August, attributed to the bitter Illinois mine union feud, derailed the engine and 15 cars of a Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad freight train 2 miles south of here. A fireman was injured.

Five Arrested In Police Raids On Gamblers

Racing, Numbers Quarters Invaded, Materials Confiscated.

Police struck twice at organized gambling yesterday, raiding two establishments in different parts of the city, and making five arrests as they confiscated a quantity of alleged gaming material.

Led by Lieut. George Little, members of the special vice squad smashed doors in a building in the 700 block of I street northwest. Fifty to 75 patrons, gathered around racing boards, escaped up the stairway and then down through the skylights of a warehouse next door. Two "old timers," not spry enough to flee, remained behind and were released.

Police, who said they were searching for a "big shot" racketeer, arrested H. Gilbert Felcone, 24, of the 300 block D street northeast, and Herman E. Roach, 39, of the 900 block Eighth street northwest. They were held for investigation.

Costs Stay Up At White House

Larger Wages and Bigger Light Bills to Keep Budget High.

The refurbishing of the White House is complete, but the mansion's budget for next year will show little decrease — what with increased wages and bigger light bills, the Associated Press says.

This became known yesterday when the House Appropriations Committee turned over to Congress its recommendation that $776,916,706 be allowed for running nine independent agencies of the Government, including the President's house.

An ironic touch was seen in the fact that the White House electric light bill will increase by $10,400, even as President Roosevelt is carrying on his campaign for cheaper electricity for homes. The increase is due to a decision to buy power. Previously it had come from the State Department supply.

The boost in wages was based on provisions for the restoration of the 5 per cent Federal pay cut on July 1.

As a whole the independent offices bill was $700,756 less than the budget estimate and $1,246,060,988 less in the aggregate than was provided for 1935.

Injunction Balks Cities' Power Aims

Writ Forbids Deals for Alabama PWA Loans.

Birmingham, Ala., Jan. 9 (AP).—Fourteen north Alabama municipalities today were enjoined from negotiating loans with the Public Works Administration to construct their own electric distribution systems, shortly after mayors of three of them had announced receipt of signed contracts for loans totaling nearly $800,000.

Issued by Judge W. I. Grubb in United States district court here on the application of Forney Johnston, attorney for a group of preferred stockholders of the Alabama Power Co., the injunction prohibits negotiating loans for construction of electric distribution systems. The three signed loan contracts were received by the mayors of Sheffield, Tuscumbia and Florence in the morning mail from Washington.

The action today was in advance of a hearing on the original petition of the preferred stockholders group for a permanent injunction to restrain the TVA and the municipalities from executing a contract with the Alabama Power Co. to purchase the distribution systems in their towns and cities, the Wheeler dam site and the transmission lines in the area.

Bolivian Force Kills Argentian on Own Soil

Buenos Aires, Jan. 9 (AP).—A dispatch to the newspaper Critica, from the frontier town of La Quiaca, today said Bolivian soldiers shot and killed Anacleto Quispes, Argentine citizen, while he was within Argentine territory.

The dispatch said the Bolivian soldiers attempted to carry away Quispes' body after the killing. The dead man's neighbors, however, interfered and seized the automobile in which the body had been placed, it was reported.

Testimony of Col. Charles Lindbergh, early in the Hauptmann trial, definitely settled the fate of Hauptmann, in my opinion. . . . When Lindbergh said coldly and emphatically that he believed Hauptmann had committed the actual crime. . . . It was as if the jailers had already slit the prisoner's trousers to fasten the electrodes to his legs. . . . All of the weight of Lindbergh's tremendous record stood behind the flier's accusation. . . The public values, above all other Lindbergh traits, his accuracy, his methodical and exact processes of reasoning, his refusal to arrive at a decision until he has weighed it precisely. . . . He has never been impulsive or hasty or rash, he has never catered to "mob" opinion. . . . He refused to back water to the most popular President in recent history. . . . This is the man who accused Hauptmann of the crime, and when he made the grim charge, it was as if the prison barber had already removed the tuft of hair to which the electrode will be fastened on Hauptmann's head. . . . That is my opinion.

A lion cub and its usual prey, a young deer, a doe, are picked for the experiment. . . . They are raised from animal infancy together, and on the screen you see the most amazing comradeship in wild animal history. . . . When the Academy awards are handed out, Director Chester M. 'Boss Rule' of Guffey Assailed By Berlin in Committee Fight

Representative Charges Senator Is 'Trying to Destroy' Him by Interference With Pennsylvania Delegation.

Protests against alleged "boss rule" of Senator Joseph Guffey, of Pennsylvania, yesterday flared into open revolt within Pennsylvania's delegation in the House, where members were engaged in a merry war over committee "plums."

Representative William M. Berlin, of Pennsylvania, whose 20 Pennsylvania indorsements for a seat on the Rules Committee began to melt away, charged Guffey with trying "to destroy me in order to vent his political wrath against a past very powerful supporter of mine."

Berlin sent letters to every member of the House Ways and Means Committee, which maps the House committee slates.

"Senator Guffey has endeavored to interfere with the Pennsylvania Democratic delegation in their effort to get together on the organization of the House, the election of the Speaker, the floor leader and the members of the Ways and Means Committee," the letter read.

"The question arises, shall the Ways and Means Committee accede to the demands of a United States Senator, or shall they be governed by the wishes of the Pennsylvania delegation and the leadership?"

Berlin almost came to blows with Representative J. Twing Brooks, Pennsylvania member of the Ways and Means Committee, when the latter refused to give him the names of members who had withdrawn indorsements. Brooks told him four had withdrawn, after Berlin threatened to "punch" his colleague if he didn't show him the petition.

"I am used to charges being made against me," he told reporters. Reports were circulated recently that Guffey protested the choice of Representative Patrick J. Boland, of Pennsylvania, as House whip. Guffey's candidate for the rules committee is said to be Representative Harry L. Haines, leader of the House Pennsylvania delegation.

Militant G. O. P. Asked In Fish Radio Talk

Advocacy of "militant Republicanism" with no "trading with the enemy on fundamental principles" came last night from Representative Fish, of New York.

"The last election was not an election," Fish said in a radio address, "but a vote in favor of Santa Claus."

Fish disagreed with those who have advocated that the Republican Party be liberalized through its national committee. He said the party's record would be formulated by Congressmen in their votes. He listed sound money, sanctity of contracts, protective tariffs and other established Republican principles as those to be worked for.

Athens, Greece, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—The newspaper Typos today reported Italian troops had landed at Avlona, Albanian seaport. The report followed unconfirmed rumors of rebellion in Albania against King Zog.

Rome, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—The foreign office and the Albanian legation today denied Athens press reports that Italian troops had landed at Avlona, Albania.

Revolt on Long Gains at Rally Of 'Blue Shirts'

State-Wide Organization Formed to Wage War on Dictatorship.

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 9 (AP).—A belligerent band of "Blue Shirters" tonight fanned the flames of insurrection against Huey P. Long's Louisiana dictatorship.

At a huge rally here tonight the Square Deal Association, self-styled "Blue Shirters," organized on a State-wide scale and prepared to push their demands for repeal of the more than 300 so-called dictatorial laws enacted last year by the Louisiana Legislature at the command of the "Kingfish."

While the blue-clad enemies of Long moved to extend their organization into every parish in the State, the dictator and his chief lieutenant, Gov. Oscar K. Allen, were absent from their "empire." Long is in Washington, and Allen mysteriously missing.

Dictatorship Strengthened.

Absence of the leaders, however, failed to check operation of the dictatorship. At noon today 32 new rivets were driven into the dictatorial framework as the last batch of the "Kingfish's" personally written laws became effective.

They give him control over every policeman and fireman in the State, subject some 15,000 school teachers to his will, provide him with greater supervision over parish and municipal governments, strike additional blows at the antagonistic New Orleans City administration, and raise taxes on manufacturing interests.

At New Orleans the Louisiana Supreme Court held it was not necessary for Associate Justice John B. Fournet to recuse himself at hearings on constitutionality of laws passed for the Long dictatorship at the time when Fournet was presiding officer of the State Senate and aided in their passage.

Justice Wins Fight.

A motion filed before the court by James C. Henriques, attorney for the board of liquidation of the city debt, requested Justice Fournet to leave the bench for arguments on the Long act seeking to reorganize the New Orleans sewerage and water board. The act gives the State administration control of the board through appointive powers.

Fournet declined to step down and his associate justices, led by Chief Justice Charles A. O'Neill, retired to chambers and decided unanimously, with Fournet not participating, that he should not be forced to recuse himself.

The court then continued the hearing until January 14, when a regular session will be held.

Two Firms Join Chain Tax Fight

Fredericksburg Assessment Again Protested.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—The Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey today joined the Sanitary Grocery Company of Washington in its attack on the Fredericksburg chain store tax.

The tax, which has met with bitter opposition by chain concerns, is $1,000 a year on each chain operating here. An extra $500 is assessed for each additional store conducted. The chains now fighting the tax operate several places here.

Petitions filed in Corporation Court seeking to recover tax paid by the Standard Oil Company and the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company in the years 1933 and 1934 allege that the imposition of the tax is beyond the powers of the city council, which passed the measure. The petitions are returnable January 20.

2 Gunmen Stage Holdup Wearing Fake Mustaches

Merrill A. Hustler, the collector, of the 1400 block of Ogden street northwest, was making his rounds, and stopped at the barbecue stand, when the two hoodlums with the false mustaches stepped up to his truck and pushed guns in his face.

"Hand over that money bag," said one.

Hustler handed over the bag, containing four $10 bills, $80 in dimes and $80 in nickels.

Accident Victim Dies in Roanoke

W. M. Hood, 67, of 510 I street northwest, died last night in a Roanoke, Va., hospital as a result of injuries received when his car skidded and crashed into a bridge abutment 7 miles south of Buchanan yesterday morning.

Mr. Hood, who was the representative of a Cincinnati valve company, was on his way to Staunton at the time of the accident. He suffered several broken bones and internal injuries.

The salesman made his home here with his two sisters, Mrs. Robert Bailey and Miss Emma Hood. Other survivors are another sister, Mrs. James L. Parkham, of Oxford, N. C., and a brother, R. H. Hood, of Asheville, N. C. Burial will be at Petersburg, Va.

Probe Pressed On Film Firms By Grand Jury

Head of St. Louis Chain Accuses Producers in Federal Inquiry.

St. Louis, Jan. 9 (AP).—A St. Louis Federal grand jury pressed a closely guarded investigation of alleged antitrust law violation by the moving picture industry today.

Charges of Allen L. Snyder, head of a major St. Louis theater chain, that it had been unable to purchase productions of Warner Brothers, First National, Paramount and R-K-O for first-run exhibition, form the opening wedge of Federal testimony.

U. S. Aids Prepare Evidence.

Russell Hardy and Harold Schilz, special assistants to Attorney General Cummings, prepared extensive evidence, backed by a four-month Department of Justice investigation.

Hardy was a witness before the Clarence Darrow NRA Review Board, which reported "bold and aggressive monopolistics" in the moving picture industry. He testified the larger producers were seeking to control the distribution and exhibition as well as the production of pictures.

It was learned reliably that the grand jury had given sole attention to the alleged Sherman antitrust law violations during the last three days.

Failed to Obtain Control.

Warner Brothers failed to obtain control of the St. Louis houses, the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central, at a recent reorganization. Later Warners opened two first-run houses of their own.

Full details of the case remained secret, but it was indicated that the practice of "block booking" and reputed "gentlemen's agreements," whereby any major producer owning a theater in any town is given first choice of productions by other concerns, were under inquiry.

A Good Starting Point.

A worthy objective underlies Commissioner Allen's plan to use part of the fund now going into relief for improving Washington's health record. He is actuated by a humanitarian desire to help thousands of people who are afflicted by disease as well as poverty. But many practical difficulties stand in the way of a city-wide health campaign carried out by unemployed nurses and medical attendants.

In view of the fact that a new health officer is about to be appointed, plans of this sort should properly be left to his discretion. Washington's public health record is far below what it should be. An active and well-organized health department should easily be able to make many improvements. No doubt that is what the Commissioners have in mind in searching the country for the best available health officer.

There is another way, however, in which the Commissioners can make an immediately constructive contribution toward the elimination of disease. Health campaigns must necessarily be associated with the work of alley clearance. Washington's miserable hovels, hidden in filthy, sunless courts, are a notorious source of infection. The Alley Clearance Authority is moving laboriously toward the demolition of these cancers in our social structure. But the problems which it faces are numerous and very complicated. It happens that Commissioner Allen is in an excellent position to cooperate with Mr. Ihlder and his small staff.

Many alley residents are on relief. When they are ousted from their present quarters, other houses must be found for them. A guarantee by the Commissioners to rent a certain percentage of the low-cost houses to be erected by the alley authority on some of the sites that will be cleared would undoubtedly accelerate the work on these projects.

Cooperation of this kind would prove to be the most effective health campaign that Commissioner Allen could undertake.

Maryland's New Governor.

Gov. Harry W. Nice, in his inaugural address yesterday, made a good start by approaching in realistic fashion the problems facing Maryland. His message should be read with care by all Marylanders. It contains the chart of the new deal which the State has adopted for the next four years.

Some of the Governor's specific proposals will be universally applauded. The adequacy of others is open to question. Suffice it to say at this time that a chief value of the address is its evidence of a healthy realization of the magnitude of the task before Mr. Nice, and his evidently genuine desire to do well for the State and its people.

In that aspiration Gov. Nice should be encouraged, for his task, under the best circumstances, is difficult. Although apparently rapidly learning, he is still relatively unfamiliar with the State government. He succeeds a man, who, through 15 years of service, held the confidence of Maryland by clear vision, fine conception of democratic government and splendid sense of justice. It is no reflection on Mr. Nice to say that he has yet to win the confidence of the State as a whole. Thus he must be cautious in every action.

As for the outgoing Governor, he leaves Annapolis with the admiration and respect, and also the best wishes, of virtually every man and woman in Maryland. He has grown in stature since his defeat. In office or out, Maryland can always be proud of Albert C. Ritchie.

Virginia's Fine Example.

A county jury at Fincastle, Va., last week sentenced to death a Negro who is the confessed slayer of two young white girls. The crime was of the type most surely calculated to arouse the mob spirit and in many Southern communities the murderer might all too easily have been the victim of lynch law.

It is to the credit of Virginia that in this case, as well as another of recent date involving a Negro murderer, the criminals have had the benefit of an eminently fair trial. It is a sad commentary upon the lawlessness and barbarity prevalent in other sections of the country that occasion should ever arise for congratulating a community upon its determination to abide by the decisions of courts and juries. Such, however, happens to be the case.

Too often the officers of the law are inclined to overrate their own ability to protect prisoners. Again Virginia has shown good judgment in using a moderate display of force to guard against mob vengeance, and in taking the precaution of housing the prisoner in a Richmond jail. These arrangements are more than an immediate safeguard against lynchings. They are an assurance to the country that the proposed Federal antilynching law is probably unnecessary, as well as undesirable and impracticable.

On A Narrow Basis.

Foreign Minister Laval of France and Premier Mussolini of Italy have pledged their respective governments to "consult together" if Germany undertakes to modify its "obligations in the matter of armaments." The action would have a more constructive flavor if the agreement had touched upon what France and Italy propose in the matter of their own obligations in this field.

Laval and Mussolini are, of course, right in saying that no country can modify its international obligations by a unilateral act. If any government were free to change treaties to favor its own interests, all such agreements would be next to worthless. But the general disarmament contemplated by the Treaty of Versailles, as well as the Geneva declaration of December 11, 1932, involves duties for France and Italy as well as for Germany. Since the governments that were allied against Germany in the World War have utterly failed to reduce their armaments, their case against the rearmament now unquestionably proceeding in the Reich has lost much of its strength.

The inconsistency of the Franco-Italian agreement on this point is sharpened by the observations of Ambassador Davis as he arrived in Washington to make a detailed report on the London naval conversations. It is inherent in sovereignty, Mr. Davis is quoted as saying, that each country should be entitled to equality of security. In other words, no nation or group of nations has the right to hold another independent state indefinitely to a condition of enforced disarmament. So one-sided an arrangement, as the Treaty of Versailles itself tacitly admitted, can be tolerated only as a condition precedent to a general reduction involving universal sacrifices.

Germany is rearming, without much secrecy, on the argument that the allied powers have themselves violated, and therefore invalidated, the disarmament section of the Versailles Treaty. An increase of 104 per cent in German steel production since 1932 gives a measure of her activities in this line. Some officials admit that Germany is "making preparations for armament equality."

Can France and Italy hope to change this policy merely through a consultative agreement to oppose it? A more constructive approach would be for these two powers to use their influence to draw Germany back into the disarmament conference. By reasonable compromise, recognizing the measure of justice behind the German attitude, it might then be possible to avoid progressive military rivalry.

The Franco-Italian agreement, by clearing up a number of irritations between those two countries, has very possibly paved the way for a constructive turn in Europe. But this will not be the case unless the agreement is broadened so that all the rights do not fall on one side of the fence and all the obligations on the other. A marriage of convenience between Laval and Mussolini, with the latter receiving a tempting dowry in the shape of colonial territory in Africa, does not of itself promise a new era of concord for the family of European nations.

High Hats.

Gold fish, whose only claim to fame has been a lack of privacy, may now take a back seat. Compared to the New Dealers, they lead the most private lives in the world. "Ichthyologist" is the professional name for those who make the lives of gold fish miserable. The name for those having the same disquieting effect upon our national figures is legion.

Now, joining the ever-growing horde of literary Davids who march on Washington armed with slings and decapitating bon mots, is Peggy Bacon, caricaturist and writer. Miss Bacon is frankly out for new blood and New Dealers. Secretary Wallace has already been captured, pinned down, miscroscopically examined, and caricatured. But he is only a start in this artist's list of prospective subjects.

There are some who feel that this literary nose-thumbing at the great and near-great can be carried too far. A probable, if not possible solution, would be to declare a closed season on New Dealers. The alternative—a moratorium on critics. On the other hand, there is distinctly something to be said in favor of this great American custom of snow-balling high hats. If done in the spirit of good clean fun, it is nothing more than a defiant, democratic gesture in a world where lese majeste has become all too rare.

The Tax Threat.

The Administration has very constructively let it be known that it will refuse to sanction Congressional appropriations outside the budget unless they are accompanied by proposals for raising the requisite revenues. By withholding requests for additional taxes at the present time, while refusing to give definite promises for the future, the President is, therefore, able to hold a threat over the heads of spendthrift Congressmen eager to add more billions to a four-billion-dollar deficit.

It is impossible at this juncture to make any perceptible impression upon such a formidable revenue shortage by voting new taxes. Indeed, drastic additions to already heavy impositions might prove self-defeating, resulting in loss of revenue because of the inhibiting effect upon business activity and the increased incentives to tax evasions. Consequently, the main efforts of the Administration are now directed not toward cutting down the deficit with the aid of taxes, but toward keeping expenditures from rising beyond all reasonable bounds. Tacit threats may not subdue the wild-eyed elements. But they will at least serve notice that there is trouble ahead for legislators who regard the public credit as inexhaustible.

The big test will come if the cash bonus bill is first passed and then approved over the presumable presidential veto. The approximately $2,200,000,000 which that measure would add to budget outlays could not possibly be covered by new taxes. But insistence upon even a partial cover would undoubtedly cause some Congressmen to think several times before overriding a veto certain to be followed by embarrassing demands for more revenue.

A Transportation System.

Senator McCarran's bill to establish a new and independent "Interstate Commerce Commission of the Air" will be welcomed insofar as it gives notice of an intention to take civil aviation out of politics.

There is no questioning the desirability of divesting the Postoffice Department of the oppressive and arbitrary powers of control which it has exercised in connection with the grant of air-mail subsidies. The evils of the existing system as revealed in the recent hearings, and the equally great abuses that resulted from the cancellation of air-mail contracts by a politically minded Postmaster General, are fresh in the public mind. Consequently there will be very general indorsement of any reasonable proposal looking toward development of a permanent aviation policy divorced from politics.

This laudable purpose can be achieved, however, without insisting upon the establishment of an independent bipartisan regulatory agency, entirely separate from the Interstate Commerce Commission. Such an agency might, in fact, prove to be much more susceptible to political influences than the long-established I. C. C., which has a record for nonpartisanship that newer regulatory bodies should envy. Moreover, the major objection to the creation of a separate agency lies in the fact that it offers no assurance of a coordinated national transportation policy, giving due weight to the importance of all agencies in this field, whether on land or water or in the air.

The country is now experiencing the ill effects of applying Federal regulation to railroads, leaving competing and complementary transportation facilities largely unregulated. While the control of air carriers, as proposed by Senator McCarran, would provide a safeguard against these familiar evils of partial regulation, it would not meet the growing demands for a unified policy.

Obviously aviation is an infant industry, with special problems that call for special treatment. Nevertheless, the public interest requires that commercial flying be developed under governmental supervision in a manner which will not handicap land and water carriers, but will supplement them. Within the limits set by a general regulatory plan civil aviation will be fostered much more intelligently and effectively if there is a single central agency charged with supervision of all forms of transportation.

Thus, a sub-commission, or separate division of the I. C. C. in charge of aviation, carrying out its duties under the watchful eyes of fellow commissioners who would have the interests of related transportation systems at heart, would be saved from those mistakes of overemphasis that so often afflict over-specialized agencies of this type.

In The Clouds.

For the past few days, Washington has been in a fog. The unkindly say that this is somewhat of a chronic state for Washington. But this time the fog has had nothing to do with the affairs of state. This was the fog that Webster explains as "vapor condensed to fine particles of water in the lower part of the atmosphere and disturbing the transparency."

"Disturbing the transparency" is somewhat of an understatement on Mr. Webster's part. Particularly in view of the fact that its toll in what is known as "overhead" expense (meaning no pun) has been mounting with each hour that the fog lay over the land. Air service, traffic on highways and railroad transportation, all have been either retarded or halted altogether. Steamers are reported aground and ferryboats remaining at anchor. So much for the material aspects.

Granting that fogs are a nuisance to everything which goes by schedule, there is nevertheless something fascinating about them. Buildings, looming large and ugly normally, become mysterious gray hulks in the mist. Garish electric signs and blinding automobile lights become friendly, blinking beacons. Passing strangers take on eerie outlines to stir the imagination.

Even inveterate landlubbers thrill at the sound of ships' whistles piercing the gloom. There is nothing to match the sound of a bell buoy shrouded in the mist. Anything might happen in a fog, and undoubtedly a lot does happen. For Mr. Webster also points out that a fog "differs from clouds only in being near the ground." Few mortals customarily walk with their heads in the clouds. Perhaps the real role of fog is to lift us all temporarily to their imaginative level.

Another reason a cold hangs on so long is because people worry you down telling you how to cure it.

Traffic Danger Zone.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently a touring car knocked a truck entirely over on Sixth street south of Constitution avenue, making the ninth consecutive accident that I have witnessed on this intersection in the past five weeks.

After the seventh accident I wrote a letter to the Director of Traffic, telling him that the Washington death rate from traffic stood a good chance every day to be increased at this intersection and that the serious situation might be helped if he ordered stop signs placed on the new streets built between Constitution and Maryland avenues southwest, at the Sixth street intersections. I have never received a reply from him, and the accidents at this intersection continue to go on.

One of these days some one is going to be killed at one of these intersections, because the repeated accidents are the cause of universal comment of the people who live or work in this vicinity and who can not understand why these intersections are not protected by stop signs.

The Post is doing what it can to cut down the death rate due to traffic fatalities in Washington, so I am now writing to you because it seems that proper publicity may accomplish something which I have not been able to have done by direct appeal to the Traffic Bureau.

My only interest in the matter is protection of the public.

Too Much Condensation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The article which I sent to The Post on the money question and which was cut down to "a letter to the editor," and published by you on January 4, makes me say: "All financial reports, despite the business depression, show that savings accounts are daily increasing. In New York, alone, they reached nearly $250,000,000 last year. As a result of these savings there is now nearly $300,000,000 less cash in circulation than a year ago."

Those figures refer to 1930 when the article was written—not 1934. To anyone who makes a study of financial affairs I am made to appear ridiculous.

The last report of the Federal Reserve Board issued a few days ago shows that the money in circulation for the week ended January 2, 1934, was $5,534,000,000. For the corresponding week in 1933 it was $5,504,000,000 or an increase of only $30,000,000.

Friendly Chidings.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Karl Schriftgiesser's interview with "Blanky" is a proper fillip to a post-holiday morning. His "ravings" have furnished reading material to those who avoid the columns devoted to the Hauptmann case and other gruesome reports. And isn't it about time for another of his book reviews?

Could the "Postlude" retain permanently the position on the "page opposite the editorial page?" Its right to a place among these letter writers is obvious and appreciated by those interested in music. I'd like to go so far as to suggest Ray C. B. Brown as annotator for the National Symphony Orchestra, whose present program notes leave much to be desired.

The Post Impressionist was a favorite, but lately there has crept into his writings a certain insipidness which he could very well correct. Once in a while he is much too learned to be refreshing.

On the whole, though, we like The Post.

Go South, Elderman!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am inclosing a copy of the cartoon appearing in your paper of January 4. If I were you I would try to familiarize myself with the conditions which are now prevailing and which have always prevailed in the South as to the hospitality of the Southern Gentleman.

This picture absolutely misrepresents the South. You, nor nobody else, has ever seen a Southern Gentleman sit in his rocking chair and sip his mint-julep while his guest, a Northern Democrat, stands up and perspires from the heat.

I am from the South myself, a man 80 years old and over, and I have never seen a Southern Gentleman sit down in his rocking chair and let his guest stand up, unless the guest would rather stand than sit. The men and women of the new South today are like the North, they are very progressive.

I often visit a Southern Gentleman who owns about 1,200 or 1,500 acres of land, and he and his family are up at daybreak in the morning all year around, and he rides over all his land and superintends the workmen thereon.

The More Abundant Life for Clams.

Little does the average clam lover suspect, or care, as he wriggles a steamed morsel from its shell, dips it into the fragrant broth, swirls it around in melted butter, and deposits it in his mouth, that it may have been unethical "churning" that brought this succulent dainty to his table. Churning is the traditional method of hunting clams in their native lairs, and—as arrests for improper churning in New Jersey the other day demonstrated—there are ways and means of churning.

Clams, it seems, are suckers for churning. If a clam digger stands in the mud or sand and churns crazily a bit with his feet, clams just give themselves up and slide into the depression from all sides. They do the same when the newer method of churning with a rake is resorted to by diggers with tired feet.

Unfortunately, however, for the old-fashioned churners, the bivalve can not differentiate between sporting and unsporting methods, and when nimble-minded hunters conceived the idea of churning with a propeller as they eased a motorboat through the mud flats, the clams responded with enthusiasm and by the bucketful. The State of New Jersey, accordingly, cracked down on the new-deal churners.

Obviously, however, this is only a stab at the problem. Others doubtless will bootleg their motorized churners into the clam-diggings and lure out the shellfish. The one sure preventive is education—impressing upon the juvenile clams that when they hear a propeller whirring above them it means, not an airplane, but the first calamitous step in churning them into chowder. (From the Philadelphia Inquirer.)

Conflicting Views On Gaelic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with interest your editorial of January 7 on E. de Valera's order to his people to learn Gaelic. But, if you permit me to say so, it seems to me you miss the point.

Forcing a language upon a people has been done in the past. The action of the Hungarian governing group some 90 years or so ago is quite in point. They found the Hungarian language in the dump, so to speak, and revived it and now the street signs of Budapest are all in a language which sounds like sneezing. The obvious advantage is that when, say, the proletariat speaks only a language which sounds like sneezing, a very serious obstacle is provided against emigration—in fact, you have your people hog-tied and peoned. They can't easily get away and have to take what wages you are willing to give them.

Of course the governing group speaks several languages. Patriotism has many angles and naturally a patriot expects to get something out of his job. Did not Dr. Johnson say that "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel?" One may not go so far, and yet agree that a patriot should not starve.

Is it not within the limits of possibility that, with Gaelic the only language, a most effective form of censorship is placed upon the Irish? They can not be exposed to intellectual contamination if they can't read any language except that in which their rulers choose to communicate to them. And if they can't get out of the country they have to take what is doled out to them.

My reaction is that E. de Valera is a rather clever man.

Washington, Jan. 7.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With reference to your recently published leading editorial on President De Valera and the Gaelic revival, may I point out that the re-establishment of Gaelic as a teaching medium is but one more move in the linguistic struggle for supremacy which has been going on for centuries?

It was precisely these same methods—compulsory teaching through the medium of English in the network of primary schools established in Ireland by England in the middle of the nineteenth century—which almost led to the death of Gaelic as a spoken language.

If the world is any richer for its intellectual intercourse with Ireland during a period when she was striving to express herself in a foreign language which had been forced upon her, how much richer will it not be when Ireland may give freely from the instinctive language of her intellect, thereby preserving her age-long cultural identity.

In view of the success of recent translations from the Gaelic—"Twenty Years A-Growing," etc., surely the fallacy of the language barrier may be discounted.

The Post Impressionist

Post Office, Thursday.

THIS Column was last week compelled to let itself be used as an arena in which two war-correspondents fought over Hindenburg: Was he a great general or not? Now the Column wants to become a gladiator.

Hindenburg's military reputation rests largely on his part in the East Prussian campaign. That campaign is, after all, a question of the Battle of Tannenberg. Joseph Danziger averred that Hindenburg's genius won the battle—and Mr. D. has the weight of tradition with him. S. Miles Bouton said that the real victor of Tannenberg for Hindenburg was the Russian Rennenkampf, because Rennenkampf failed to do anything to aid his colleage Samsonoff—and Mr. B. has the weight of the antihero vote.

But there are more claimants:

One is the famous Ludendorff, who—with a lack of false modesty characteristic of him—declared that he originated the strategy.

Another is Gen. Hoffmann, Chief of the Operations Section, whose advocates assert that the strategy was completely of his making.

Four candidates: Hindenburg, Rennenkampf, Hoffmann, Ludendorff.

* * *

Into east Prussia, Russia had sent two armies: that of the south, under Samsonoff; that of the north, under Rennenkampf. "Germany's only hope," says Mr. Bouton, "lay in defeating each army separately;" yet "Hindenburg, deciding to deal the main (i. e., first) blow at Samsonoff, left but a thin line to hold Rennenkampf." Had Rennenkampf attacked that line, Hindenburg would have had to send to its relief so many troops that he could not have rolled up Samsonoff's flanks. As, however, Rennenkampf did nothing, Hindenburg won—by no merit of his own.

What of Rennenkampf?

Mr. Danziger wrote us: "Rennenkampf was in a box. Whatever he might do would be wrong. He could not come to the support of Samsonoff without exposing his right flank. He dared no advance for fear of exposing his rear." And of course he must not retreat while Samsonoff was unbeaten. But Rennenkampf's impotence was no fault of Rennenkampf's.

Then Rennenkampf is out.

* * *

How about Ludendorff?

No less a hand than that of Ludendorff himself has written:

So Ludendorff won Tannenberg—

But wait!

The official records—thrown open long after Ludendorf. wrote this—demonstrate that the decisive idea of first concentrating upon Samsonoff rather than upon Rennenkampf did not originate with Ludendorff, "and that the only orders issued by Ludendorff en route, apart from those relating to minor reinforcements, were for the withdrawal of headquarters to Marienburg."

Then Ludendorff is out—and the man who did originate the idea ought to be in.

* * *

Hoffmann!

Hear Winston Churchill speaking in "The Unknown War." He says: "His (Hoffmann's) knowledge of his profession was profound . . . (There was) no clearer brain or more discerning eye . . . in the elite of the General Staff."

The official records, still open, demonstrate that only upon his initiative was the decisive concentration against Samsonoff undertaken.

So Hoffmann won Tannenberg.

* * *

No, sir!

Like all opponents of debunking, we—when the debunkers do trick us into their game—are not going to let their substitute heroes get any of the credit that has been taken away from the heroes of tradition.

Von Francois was the real victor.

* * *

Francois "was a man of independent and unruly temperament," says Churchill. But Francois combined therewith a thorough knowledge of his stuff.

Everybody now knows that, on the 25th of that fatal August, the Samsonoff Russians would have come out clean, had the Germans attacked. Ludendorff ordered Francois to attack. "With magnificent results," Francois disobeyed.

Everybody now knows that, at the second and concluding crisis of the battle, three days later, Ludendorff "resigned himself to the escape of the Russian center . . . and ordered Francois to advance in a direction which undoubtedly would have enabled the mass of the Russians to escape to the southeast . . . But Francois disobeyed these instructions and, at great risk . . . ran out his cordon of posts and pickets along the Neidenburg-Wllienberg road and thus entrapped the whole Russian center."

* * *

British Troops Again Tread European Soil

By Edward Acheson.
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

London, Jan. 1.

IT HAS become the fashion among British political historians to point out, not without a sly satisfaction, that now, at long last, necessity is forcing America to fashion something which, in a dim light, will pass for a consistent foreign policy. The loose-fitting Monroe Doctrine, with economic individualism as a lining, they claim, is no longer becoming either to the United States or to the situation in which she finds herself.

So prevalent has the criticism grown that, like most, it has eventually reverted: the same criterion of consistency is also being applied to Britain's attitude toward foreign powers.

And the answers are various—for the most part designed to explain away an annoying paradox.

* * * *

TODAY England is vitally interested in Europe. Two years ago England's interest in things European was negligible. Two years ago the whole country was quite American in its attitude toward the problems of continental peoples—an attitude characterized by a lofty ignorance of the issues at stake, a marked impatience at being interrupted in the more serious concerns of domestic adjustment, and a complacent conviction that the whole thing didn't matter tuppence one way or the other.

A certain symptom of this recurrent British disaffection for her neighbors is the nostalgic pursuit of those twin chimeras, Splendid Isolation and Empire Free Trade—Splendid Isolation which England can't afford, and Empire Free Trade which the colonies won't pay for.

But at the moment both shades seem definitely to have been laid.

The empire retrain is muted to an undertone, enlivened only by parliamentary variations on the Indian theme. England is wholeheartedly back in European politics. The pendulum has swung to its opposite extreme. And the questioning of Britain's foreign policy is certainly in order. Is this eccentric shifting of emphasis from Ottawa to Geneva, from isolation to leadership in international cooperation, an indication of uncertainty? Or is it opportunism? Or compromise? Is there, in effect, any consistent policy behind it?

* * * *

I BELIEVE there is a perfect consistent policy. I believe that the apparent paradox arises, not from the British attitude, but from elements in the situation which are themselves inconsistent.

Since the beginning of the century it has become increasingly apparent that England's geographical position as a lesser appendage of Europe is not the happiest from which to play her role as The Seat of Empire. Not infrequently local disturbances become so strident that England can't keep her mind on her work. From that point of view, alone, Splendid Isolation has infinite charms. Or even an isolation not quite so splendid but much more profitable, which would embrace the English-speaking peoples of the world.

But Britain doesn't make her living from being a Seat of Empire. Nor by trading merely with her colonies and dominions. By far the greater portion of her foreign commerce is carried on with the continent. On the condition of those markets depends the condition of British industy and finance.

Whether England likes it or not she's bound to be interested in continental questions. And she doesn't like it a lot at present. Her economy and her location tend to force her along one course, her natural sympathies and her political genius suggest another, almost diametrically opposite. In such a dilemma even a consistent policy of compromise is bound to exhibit some odd and sudden dislocations, some apparently inexplicable changes of front.

* * * *

IN the present instance, the decision to send British troops to the Saar came so abruptly and from such a clear sky that one newspaper published two editions decrying the rumor after the order had been posted. At one moment the ministry was loudly promising "no entanglements," the next 1,500 men were on the march.

And the situation which they will have to police is exactly one with which neither the American nor the British temper has much patience. "If they'd only stop being silly in different colored shirts and get to work," pretty well sums up the attitude of the British public. But, unfortunately, it is just this "silliness" that has made it imperative for England to "interfere."

The Saar is extremely dangerous. Over the border at Nancy lies the Twentieth French Army Corps. The Sixth is at nearby Metz. Within the Saar itself are, supposedly, 20,000 of Herr Hitler's Storm Troopers, a number of them formerly of the notorious Austrian Legion. Those bodies of men frame the picture.

In the foreground is Mr. Knox, the league's commissioner, Irish, fortunately firm, and extremely fair. Opposing him is Herr Roechling, leader of the Nazi front in the Saar, Nazi-ing for all he's worth, not omitting a few enthusiastic "strafes" for the Pope. Since the Saar is five-eighths Catholic, and since Germany wants an overwhelmingly favorable vote more than she's wanted anything since the war, it would seem at first glance as though Herr Roechling's was a peculiar type of propaganda.

* * * *

BUT at just this point enters the unique type of Saar complication. For it must be remembered that Herr Roechling is not only a Nazi leader, but at the same time a contractor to a number of French firms which deal hand in glove with the French government. Indeed, the whole Saar situation is shot through with this interlocking of French and German interests. Herr von Papen, for instance, is said to have a considerable amount of stock in several French concerns in the Saar, and his relations with the Comite des Forges in France are generally admitted to be quite intimate.

Hence the real division of the plebiscite comes, not between France and Germany—there is no chance of the Saar voting to incorporate with France, but between a free-trade Saar under the league and a tariff-bound Saar under Germany. Under the league the Saar firms would make more money for individual German owners. Under German rule, the German government would make more money. Since it not infrequently happens that individual Germans and the government coincide, even a cursory glance will suggest the nice balance of interests that the vote on January 13 is to decide.

* * * *

NO one in England looks for serious trouble before or at the time of the vote. What happens after is a matter of nervous speculation. But England is bearing the brunt of maintaining peace. It marks her return to the arena of European politics. Thus far her record of tact and diplomacy is hard to equal, and even the Daily Worker, that British paper which invariably suspects the British government of the most nefarious crimes, has been unable to discover the ulterior motive.

It may be that England, poised between the horns of her dilemma, between Empire and Europe, is girding up her loins to make the best of two possible worlds. Whatever comes of it, certainly England's attitude in the matter of the Saar has given to Europe the feeling that the new year is to be a happier year.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Joint recital by Ninon Vallin, soprano, and Rene Le Roy, flautist, in Mayflower Hotel ballroom Wednesday morning. Miscellaneous program of vocal and flute solos, and songs with flute obbligato. Pierre Darck, accompanist.

On the evidence of the tonal quality displayed, one would judge that Mme. Vallin was placed in the unfortunate predicament of singing above a cold. At least, the clear timbre, which one pleasantly remembers from a previous hearing, was present only at intervals, and in its place was a moire tone that imparted a curious ambivalence to all her readings. There was even a hint of huskiness in her opening number, the Handelian recitative and aria, "So shall the lute and harp awake."

Nevertheless, the singer's artistry triumphed over impediments, and the flexibility of execution was unimpaired. Indeed, the chatoyant vocal line lent a peculiar poignancy to Duparc's lovely "Chanson Triste" and to the tenderly pathetic aria, "Adieu, notre petite table," from "Manon." It may have been a help, rather than a hindrance, to her effective delivery of the saucy seguidilla from "Carmen," the tessitura of which is a little low for her natural range.

One listened with interest to the three Peruvian melodies collected by Mme. Beclard d'Harcourt and attributed by her to an Inca origin; they certainly have a remotely primitive flavor, although the harmonization is a bit too European. In the presentation of these novelties, Mme. Vallin was assisted by Rene Le Roy, who was also a collaborator in Ravel's "La Flute Enchantee," Gounod's "A Toi Mon Coeur," Hollman's "Chanson d'Amour" and Walter Rummell's arrangement of a seventeenth century chanson.

Mme. Vallin closed the recital with a spirited reading of four Spanish songs—Manuel de Falla's "Nana" and "Jota" and the "Malaguena" and "Polo" of Joaquin Nin.

With Rene Le Roy's skill on that temperamental instrument, the flute, one was already well acquainted. On this occasion he put his virtuosity to the test in an allegro by Mozart, which contains a very difficult cadenza, and in the Chopin waltz, Op. 64, No. 1, and came through with flying colors. Less exacting numbers were Desportes' "Rondo On Popular Airs" and a "Romance" by Widor. While his tone was occasionally overblown in passages making heavy demands upon breath control, it was for the most part smooth and dulcet.

Along The Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

The Girls' Secret.

THERE has been so much discussion recently about the freedom of the press that the projection at this time of Mrs. Roosevelt's press conferences would not seem to be amiss. Not that they involve the freedom of the press. The discussion just sort of brings them to mind.

BARGERON.

And if the discussion does not in itself warrant bringing the matter up, then it can be related to the frequent complaint of the newspaper girls that they don't like to confine their work to women's activities, that they want to get out and cover the hard-boiled news just like the men.

The point is that Mrs. Roosevelt's press conferences simply must be brought up.

For some time now the men have contended that inasmuch as they permit the girls to attend their conferences, with Mr. Roosevelt for example, they should also be permitted to attend the girls' conferences with Mrs. Roosevelt. Why, in these days of sex equality, we men have contended, and rightly so, should the girls after partaking of our hospitality go off and have their own little party with Mrs. Roosevelt?

At first, it wasn't such a serious matter. The girls used to tell us what happened at those exclusive conferences and it was just as good as though we were there. Mrs. Roosevelt told them, though, that this had to be cut out. She was tired, she said, of having something she told the girls appear in the column of some man. The result is that the girls won't tell us a thing now. They even avoid us on the streets to make sure we do not catch them in a moment of indiscretion and learn their secrets.

Naturally, we have renewed our insistence that we be permitted to attend the conferences. We have about as much chance, of course, as the celluloid-legged dog that is supposed to have chased the asbestos cat through the lower regions.

* * * *

The girls contend that Mrs. Roosevelt's conferences have nothing to do with the Government, that they concern her comings and goings and her activities in connection with her pet social projects. This being the case, there is no reason, they say, why they should not be able to get together once or twice a week without the presence of any men.

But Mrs. Roosevelt's effort to make Secretary Ickes dismiss two of his men, his chief assistant, Mr. Burlew, and his chief espionage man, Mr. Glavis, can not be classed as ordinary comings and goings on the part of the First Lady or little routine social projects. This constitutes news. It is not matter for the women and the women's pages. We men eat that stuff up, too.

* * * *

And we men wouldn't particularly mind being barred from the conferences if the girls would get the story. They have been complaining since goodness knows when that they are two-fisted he reporters if the city editor would just turn them aloose and not keep them at describing what the well-dressed women wear. Yet, when a story of first importance, such as this, appears they muff it.

Why, for crying out loud, the girls should have had that story on the front pages for the past week. It is a perfect set-up.

It was a cracker-jack story in the first instance, when the hint was given to Mr. Ickes to dismiss the two men. But what a whale of a story it is now that Mr. Ickes has said he isn't going to do any such thing.

Surely the girls have been around the men enough to know how to develop a story like this. They should keep running back and forth between Mrs. Roosevelt and Mr. Ickes, getting statements from one, and then statements from the other. First thing you know, it would look like a snowfall over the Nation's Capital, or at least that portion of it between the White House and Mr. Ickes' office, such a deluge of statements would there be.

Of course, if they can't get the story they might lend us a dress and let us slip into a conference.

Stunts And Puzzles For A Winter Evening, With Fair Warning To The Solemn-Minded.

By Theodore Hall.

TO that mythical land of puzzledom where missionaries row cannibals across rivers and bar-keeps have to divide 8 gallons of beer into two 4-gallon lots (using only an 8-gallon measure, a 5-gallon measure, and a 3-gallon), R. B. Abraham has written a new guide from England. In 1932 his "winter nights entertainment" won him a following of ingenious readers. Now he gives us "Diversions and Pastimes" (Dutton, $1.75), a little book chock-a-block full of puzzles, tricks, games and stunts.

For addicts, it should be a signal to bring out pad and paper, cards, coins and string, and settle down to an evening of challenge and prowess. For people who just don't like to fuss about anything less important than the grocer's bill or the Saar plebiscite, it should be rather more than enough to set their teeth on edge.

Assuming you're in the first group—otherwise I'm afraid there's no joy on the table for you today—let's try a few of Mr. Abraham's brain-teasers. I'll put the answers down at the foot of the column, if you swear you'll remember the copybook maxims and not peek.

* * * *

A. "In the year 1795 a man named Charles Smith married the sister of his widow. How did he do it?"

B. "Write down ten naughts and the work 'trick' thus: '0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 trick.' Add six strokes to them and make a sentence."

C. "Punctuate the following sentence: 'Smith where Jones had had had had had had had had had had had had the examiners' approval.'" There are 11 of those pesky "hads."

* * * *

D. "A rope passes over a pulley and a weight of 150 pounds is fixed to one end of it. A man weighing 150 pounds starts to climb steadily up the rope. Will the weight rise or fall?" You probably met this in grammar school, but did you know the answer? The next one, though, looks brand new to my eye.

E. "In a certain library (a picture shows it to be a private library or study) no two books have the same number of words. The number of books in the library is greater than the number of words in the largest book in the library. How many words does one of the books contain, and what is the book about?" Very tricky, of course, but the beauty is that the clews are all there.

* * * *

Now the above are what Mr. Abraham calls easy problems. Here are a couple from the "not so easy" list.

F. "A column of troops 1 mile long is moving along a road at a uniform pace. An aide-de-camp is sent from the head of the column, delivers a message from the rear of the column and returns. He also moves at a uniform pace and arrives back at the head of the column when it has just covered its own length. How far does the A. D. C. go?"

G. "An athlete runs around a fixed central point in a spiral path at the rate of 10 miles an hour, the spiral being of such a form that each turn is only half the length of the preceding one. How many times will he go around the center point in 10 minutes if his first circuit takes him half a minute?"

* * * *

While the most impatient addicts are sharpening their pencils at once, we can run over the rest of the book's array. Here are match and coin games of all kinds, simple and subtle; a collection of "strong man tricks;" a great section on plain and fancy knots, with some string games thrown in; games with scissors and paper, including how to make cardboard models of chemical crystals (such imposing forms as the rhombic dodecahedron and the triakisoctahedron); and rules for writing "magic squares" — those checkerboards of figures which add the same on the verticals, horizontals, diagnols, etc., and leave me limp with admiration.

One very astute trick has a bookish flavor which should recommend it here. Learn it by heart, mystify your friends, and gain a complete social success—as the ads say.

"Ask someone to select a page of a book, to choose a word in any of the first nine lines, and in the first nine words of that line. He is then to multiply the number of the page by 2 and then by 5, to add 20, to add the number of the line, to add 5, to multiply by 10, to add the number of the word in the line, and to tell you the result of these operations. If you mentally deduct 250 from his result you can find the chosen word."

Hold your breath, then, and let's hear Mr. Abraham's explanation. "Example: Page 561, 9th line, 8th word. Then 561 times 10 is 5,610, plus 20 is 5,630, plus 9 is 5,639, plus 5 is 5,644, times 10 is 56,440, plus 8 is 56,448. Then when you are told the number 56,448 you deduct 250, which gives you 56,198." And that, you see, means page 561, 9th line, 8th word. So long as everyone is feeling clear-headed enough to turn in perfect figures, what could be neater?

* * * *

Now for those answers, and don't blame me if they make you mad.

A. "He married his sister first."

B. "good dog do a trick."

C. "Smith, where Jones had had 'had had,' had had 'had.' 'Had had' had had the examiners' approval."

D. "This problem, which was invented by Lewis Carroll, had not yet been answered satisfactorily. There is really not enough data." Sorry!

E. "A blank book; about nothing." Think that over, but it's all jake.

F. "2.414 miles."

G. "An infinite number of times." But even if you feel like leading a posse after cagy Mr. Abraham, at least you can't say that "Diversions and Pastimes" bored you.

Honesty Pays

Transient Who Borrowed a Half Dollar Comes Through Promptly.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—Merle Reese's opinion of the credit of transients has been considerably raised as a result of a letter he received yesterday.

Some weeks ago, a transient, R. W. King, staying at the local bureau, "touched" Reese for 50 cents. It was a loan, and would be repaid. King assured Reese, who is employed at the bureau. Reese was sure his "loan" was a gift. That was until the letter arrived from Warren, Pa., with King's money order for 50 cents.

Britannica Junior

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE Encyclopaedia Britannica Co., of London, Toronto, and New York, has just issued Britannica Junior, an Encyclopedia for boys and girls, in 12 tall volumes, printed on thick paper and in good type, bound in durable blue covers.

It seems that for many years the publishers of the successive editions of the Encyclopedia Britannica have had in mind a plan for issuing an encyclopedia for children, that would be as useful for boys and girls as the greater work is for adults. There was in fact such a work in existence, although I can not myself remember seeing it—Weedon's Modern Encyclopedia—and this was bought by the E. B. people, who began to revise it. They found they had to extend the work to 12 volumes, and as you always find when you start out to renovate a house, they discovered that most of the material had to be wholly rewriten and many new articles added.

* * * *

Although this new work is called Britannica Junior, "not a single article in that work is carried forward into the Junior." But the same editors are responsible for both undertakings.

The first volume is called "Ready Reference." Here is a very brief summary of information, which one can take in at a glance; then, if one wishes more details, one can find them in the longer articles in the succeeding volumes. This first volume is what a "Finder" is to a telescope.

Whether you want to look up Cricket or Jersey City or Jehol or Shilling, the first volume gives you the few words necessary for a definition.

Then follow ten volumes giving regular articles in the manner of any first-rate encyclopedia, except that they are adapted to the needs of boys and girls.

The twelfth and last volume is certainly original and its value will depend entirely on the amount of curiosity, perseverance, and intelligence contained in the brain of the owner or user of the book; it is called "Study Guide."

The volumes are copiously and attractively illustrated.

Churches Push Fight Against Sunday Films

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—Seven thousand church and Sunday School members in Hagerstown and Washington County thus far have signed petitions opposing Sunday movies here, and Charles Morrison, chairman of a committee which has been circulating the petitions, believes this number will be increased to 10,000 when all of the petitions are in. These petitions will be presented to the county's Senator and six representatives in the House of Delegates. Twenty-four of the 45 churches in the county thus far have obtained signatures.

It was learned from an authoritative source that a bill calling for a referendum on the subject probably may not even be introduced.

Theater interests and others who began circulating ballots a month ago, asking patrons and others to signify their approval or disapproval of Sunday movies, would be satisfied for a referendum on the subject and are understood to be willing to abide by such a decision.

In asking the public to vote on the question, these interests pointed out that Sunday movies had been legalized in Cumberland and several other Maryland cities and towns, that it felt a ballot such as was circulated was a fair one.

Statements made by opponents of Sunday movies that the managers of theaters did not desire Sunday movies, but had been forced by outside interests to circulate the ballots, were denied.

Roosevelt's Budget Faces Fight On Hill

By Elliott Thurston.

SINCE spenders and savers both find merit in the budget, a natural assumption is that Mr. Roosevelt has again demonstrated his skill in finding middle ground. However, the perhaps somewhat fatalistic complacency with which the budget has been received by the business-banking world appears to be due to realization that Mr. Roosevelt has given the savers more reason to cheer than the spenders.

The question now is whether he can hold Congress down to the limits set. That he has every intention of doing so is conceded. Execution, rather than intention, is the important thing. And it is evident that compromise will not do. The time has come when Mr. Roosevelt will have to put up a fight against powerful groups in Congress. He will have to hold out against progressives whose favor and support he has heretofore courted, often at the cost of dubious compromise.

It was certain to happen that whatever sum Mr. Roosevelt proposed to spend for relief would be doubled or trebled by so-called progressives. There are a certain number of members of Congress who always play this game. It is assumed to be politically popular. It is easy to play. It is always easy to pretend to be more generous, more compassionate, more moved by distress and destitution than the man in the White House. It is not so easy to strike such an attitude against Mr. Roosevelt because he has made human wants his dominant keynote.

Nevertheless, the spenders can and do say now that Mr. Roosevelt's estimate of the number on relief is too low. His figure is 5,000,000. From that he deducts the 1,500,000 of unemployables whom he would turn back to state or local charity. Thus he gets the basic figure of 3,500,000 of employable unemployed for whom he proposes to find work by government spending.

* * * *

THE spenders were sure to challenge this figure, or if not that, then to say that the $4,000,000,000 sum which Mr. Roosevelt proposes is too small to make enough work to employ this many unemployed. Those who take this view in Congress, whether sincerely or because it seems to them to be politically popular, are not easy to refute. That is, it is going to take firmness and forceful leadership to defend and stand by the figures set by Mr. Roosevelt.

The spenders will not accuse Mr. Roosevelt of being heartless or inhuman, but they will say that his figures are mistaken. It will be necessary for the administration and its leaders to demonstrate conclusively that the 5,000,000 figure is a realistically true figure, proved by actual relief rolls, and that the many larger figures are sheer guesswork and gross exaggerations. Once an effort is made to compromise or to haggle about the basic figure, the chance of holding even to a $4,500,000,000 unbalance of the budget will be gone.

The question will then remain of showing that the $4,000,000,000 will create work for as many of the 3,500,000 employable unemployed as are not taken back into private employment. The spenders will have the advantage of the argument for the Administration is none too sure on this score. Made work has proved slow, expensive and relatively ineffective in supplying employment both in this country and abroad. That is one reason why the business men came out for the dole instead.

* * * *

AT ALL events, the President is in for a battle to sustain even the proposed budget, big as it is, much as it exceeds his own estimates of a year ago. The point is that in the present lack of precise, static and conclusive figures on unemployment, it is never possible to settle a debate over the true facts with finality, and if compromise is attempted the figures are always bound to become bigger because of the political tactics of the spenders.

That Mr. Roosevelt now has every intention of going to the mat to sustain his budget is fairly plain. He has emphatically told the press that he will insist on the principle that if Congress exceeds the budget it must levy the taxes necessary to raise the money for the added expenditures. He has applied that principle to the bonus and to the independent offices bill, passed over his veto last year.

If the principle is adhered to now, the chances of holding Congress to the present budget are far better than by debating disputed figures on the number of unemployed, the number that can be turned back to local relief and the number that can be given made work out of the $4,000,000,000. Congress is far less inclined to be prodigal when forced to levy the taxes needed to support the prodigality. Spending may be popular. Taxes certainly are not.

* * * *

THE more the budget is considered from the standpoint of the known figures on unemployment, from economic and especially from political viewpoints, the more evident it must be that Mr. Roosevelt has given the savers more reason to be pleased than the spenders. Not that another deficit, this time of more than $4,500,000,000 for the fiscal year when hopes were aroused for a balanced budget, is anything to cheer about.

Yet those who are deeply disturbed by the danger of budgetary collapse and inflation, by the deterrant effects upon recovery of private activity as long as Federal deficits are annually running into the billions, will have reason to feel encouraged if Mr. Roosevelt succeeds in holding to his present budget. To do that will require a resolute stand, which Mr. Roosevelt now appears ready and determined to take and hold.

The Once Over

The Test.

"It can't be much of a show," declared Mrs. Twitchell as Elmer returned from the annual automobile show.

"It was excellent," insisted Elmer.

"Why not?"

"Last year you brought home 32 pounds of show literature," returned Mrs. Twitchell, "and tonight you can't have a bit more than 24 pounds 6 ounces."

"Are you sure?" demanded Elmer, paling a bit. "I was hoping I had bettered last year's record by 5 pounds or more. Surely, I've brought home more pamphlets."

"Yes," admitted Mrs. Twitchell, who had been checking up. "This year's total is 129 circulars, folders, ets., as against 123 for 1934, but they're smaller."

"That's too bad," sighed Elmer, "but it really is a good auto show. In fact, I think the literature shows a marked improvement, and the pictures are bigger."

"Still, an auto show ain't what it used to be," insisted Mrs. Twitchell. "Remember the 1928 show?"

"Ah!" exclaimed Elmer, his eyes glowing. "There was an auto show! I carried home nearly 75 pounds of booklets from that show on opening night alone."

"Yes, and I carted home 68 pounds, not counting a couple of motor magazines," sighed Mrs. Twitchell. "We had enough literature to litter up every room in the house and still give some to the ashman!"

* * * *

"I'll never forget it," continued Elmer, "not only——"

"What a collection we had that year!" exclaimed Elmer. "Together we carried home 235 personal cards."

"How many did you get this year?"

"Only about 67," replied Elmer, digging them out of various pockets. "The salesmen are getting stingier with their cards. I found one fellow who had an elastic band on his. He'd give it to you and then snap it out of your vest."

"Auto shows ain't what they used to be, and don't try to tell me different," concluded Mrs. Twitchell.

Gov. Nice's Address Before Maryland State Assembly

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 9.—The following is, in part, the inaugural address delivered by Gov. Harry W. Nice as he took office here today:

Ladies and gentlemen of the General Assembly, citizens of Maryland:

Called to the great office of Governor of Maryland, I greet you. With mingled feelings of gratification and solemnity, I approach the task before me. Keenly appreciating the duties and responsibilities of this important office with which I have been honored, and with a proper sense of humility, I welcome the realization of my ambition to be of service to my State . . .

We represent the two great political parties of national scope and origin, which, together, dominate the public affairs of this country. We must ever remember that we are the tribunes of the people of Maryland, and, as such, public servants. It is important that we legislate and administer in the interest of all, adjourning politics, with the sole desire to act intelligently and constructively . . .

Jobless Aid Needed.

These economic disturbances, the distress of our people and the chaotic condition of the times may, in the final analysis, prove to be a not altogether unmixed evil. The veil of unhealthy optimism has been torn from our eyes. We have been taught the true virtue of humility and brought face to face with the problems of our fellow men . . . Unemployment relief must be provided. This condition came upon us as the result of a great economic depression. It must be met manfully and bravely. People must not be allowed to starve or go unclothed. This is our burden. It must not be met by experimental panaceas. We must remember that even in a democracy the freedom and privileges of the individual must frequently be curtailed for the welfare of the State; and, when such restrictions are imposed in response to a great national necessity, it is our duty to support, rather than censure, those charged with the caring for such emergency.

The very magnitude of the task gives one an understanding sympathy with the President of the United States as he struggles with his gigantic burden. The severe criticism leveled by reactionaries at Republicans in Maryland because our platform in the recent election contained no general condemnation of the President is unworthy.

Partisanship Scored.

We are content to say that in matters affecting the very life of the people, patriotism must rise above partisanship; and we are privileged to admire the fine passion for humanity which inspires the Chief Executive, without entire approval of the specific plans formulated by his advisers, sometimes at war amongst themselves, and sometimes with no greater experience than is to be had within the sheltered walls of the academic world. . . . The insistent demands that the constitutional guarantees, within whose protection our system has been built, and our Nation has grown great, shall be undermined, in order that theorists may experiment at will with great business interests affecting millions of our people, excite our profound apprehension and alarm.

We are separate but coordinate branches of the Government, each exercising authority within the sphere of constitutional limitations. You need have no apprehension that I shall ever appear before you in an attempt to encroach upon your authority. . . .

Promises No Coercion.

Today I shall call to your attention only such things as I deem of outstanding importance, the accomplishment of which now rests in your hands. It is my desire to rely upon your cooperation; I shall never attempt coercion. . . .

Since the election, information has been made public that materially changes the State's financial picture, which formerly seemed so satisfactory to many of our people. Entering 1934 with an apparent surplus of over $1,600,000, we are now advised that this surplus will be supplanted by a deficit of $2,300,000. When I shall have done what I firmly intend to do, that is, to call upon the heads of departments, not only to eliminate every item of waste and extravagance, but also to bring about a reduction in operating expenses below the appropriations for the remaining months of the budgetary year, even this, in itself, will not be sufficient to recoup this deficit of $2,300,000. The deficit must be accepted as a fact, else we gamble with the future. . . .

. . . We are paying as much today for the building and maintenance of good roads as we were paying four years ago. We also know that road construction has not increased, but has decreased, while the cost of maintenance has increased with no material improvement in our road system.

Demands Investigation.

In the face of the necessity for greater economy in the administration of the Department of State Roads, an examination of the commission's own published reports shows us that while the income—that is, the cost to the taxpayer—has remained approximately the same during the past few years, our State has not correspondingly added to its mileage in modern, improved roads, and the main arteries of travel have not been kept abreast of traffic needs.

These facts cry aloud for an investigation. I am firmly convinced that, through rigid economy and the adoption of business methods, a sufficient saving can be effected to permit you to relieve the automobilist of the burdensome license fees which he now pays, and establish a $2 tag fee.

I advocate the passage of legislation which will readjust the present allotment of funds applicable to this department, and the expenditure of the same, so that the incoming commission may be provided with a budget sufficient only for the proper maintenance and construction of an efficient roads system in Maryland . . .

Relief Ultimatum Cited.

We are face to face with an ultimatum from the Federal Government that its contribution of financial assistance to provide for the relief of the unemployed, hungry and distressed is to be discontinued as of February 1, unless ways and means are provided to meet the crisis through replenishment of the State's exhausted funds. This is a certainty and not a gamble, and must receive your immediate attention.

For this purpose alone you must provide ways and means to guarantee a fund of not less than $7,200,000 annually. When you shall have done this, I am assured by the Federal Government that it will cooperate with us in carrying our relief burden.

. . . Unemployment relief is no longer regarded as an emergency requirement, as it has become an annually recurring charge which may be present for several years. As such, it is an item for which provision should be made from current revenues.

Representatives of the Federal Government have predicted to me a continuation of this burden, with the probabilities of mounting costs. Maryland must not and shall not be deprived of the advantages received by other States, through failure or refusal on our part fully to cooperate with the Government, provided that, in our judgment, constitutional guarantees shall not have been infringed or impaired, nor the fundamental principles of government disregarded.

Opposes Realty Tax Boost.

Real estate is carrying its full load of taxation and, in making provision for the things to which I have called your attention, it should not be additionally burdened. This is not the time to go into an extended discussion of the relative merits of specific methods of taxation which you may consider. Later, however, I shall convey to you the advice and judgment of those with whom I have conferred, together with my recommendations and reasons for the same, which I hope will prove of help to you in arriving at your determination.

I caution you only concerning the mandate of the Federal Administration, which makes it imperatively necessary that you act at once and that your plan of taxation be productive of returns beginning February 1. Your failure to act will forfeit this necessary Federal assistance. It has been said that no Maryland Legislature is capable of the performance of serious business prior to the middle of its session. Let us disprove this assertion.

In this work we must not be deceived by false prophets, nor misled by confusing arguments advanced in the interest of any group or groups. No tax can ever be a popular tax. It is obvious that we must have new taxation, and ours is the difficult task of devising a system that will distribute the burden equitably and fairly. We must face the facts and be honest with ourselves and the people. We must cast aside partisanship of every nature, and insist upon the loyal cooperation of every element in the community. Every taxpayer must bear in mind that we are not an alien power imposing its will upon a subject people, but merely agents appointed by the public to perform for it a duty, lest suffering and want continue and the foundation of the Government itself be shaken.

Urges Central Relief Bureau.

. . . There should be a department of social welfare in Maryland which should take its place side by side with the Department of Health, the Department of Education and other established branches of the State government. The present Board of State Aid and Charities could well serve as a nucleus for the development of such a department.

In order that the people of the State may have available, readily and easily, a central source of information concerning the financial condition of all departments and agencies of the State, I propose to request the Comptroller to set up within the Department of Financial Review and Control a division to be known as the Bureau of Fiscal Control. Ample authority to do this is vested, by law, in the Comptroller.

Such a bureau would act as a clearing house for all financial transactions involving distributions to State employes and would be a means of control over disbursements made by all State agencies and departments . . . Establishment of such a bureau will be the means of ascertaining definitely, at all times, the exact financial condition of every State agency. It will perfect a method of remitting periodically for State indebtedness to all vendors in single remittances. It will result in a correct determination of cost distribution, applicable to every State agency. It will make available information of the current status of appropriations from the standpoint of cash positions and encumbered balances.

Sees Value in Reports.

The operation of such a bureau will be of further value, in that it will permit the publication of periodic reports of the financial situation of the State and its several agencies . . .

Another matter to which I have given thought is the necessity of having all capital expenditures passed upon by an authority independent and separate from the State agencies proposing such capital expenditures. . . .

The declaration of intentions acts should be repealed. Whatever may have been the causes which prompted their enactment, those causes have ceased to be of importance today.

I recommend to your favorable consideration the passage of laws which will provide for permanent registration and the installation of voting machines. . . .

The war veterans of the State should have the greatest consideration at your hands, to the end that all rights to which they are entitled by reason of the great service rendered in a time of need, be accorded them. It was with this in mind that I advocated the appointment of a service officer. . . .

I advocate enactment of a measure which will provide for installment payments of State taxes, as I believe that such a system will make the tax burden bear more easily upon the people. . . .

I believe that economic recovery and the reemployment of the millions now unemployed are dependent upon the reestablishment and maintenance of confidence in the stability of governmental policies and upon strict adherence to the constitutional guarantees of the right to life, liberty and property. There must be no taxation which will result in the curtailment of industrial production . . .

There are . . . two measures which should have your serious and careful thought and consideration at ths time, I refer to old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. These are subjects for immediate legislation, and machinery must be set up, so that, in case of future unemployment, there will be some plan, already in effect, whereby relief can be afforded without the necessity of other calls upon the taxpayer to provide ways and means to meet such emergencies. A system of insurance against unemployment, predicated upon some sound insurance basis, should be provided. Legislation should also be enacted during this session providing a plan of old-age pensions . . .

Republican Party 'Not Dead.'

In the United States, under the stress of the depression, there has been a growing tendency toward expansion of the powers of the Federal Government, with a corresponding concentration of authority in the executive. Many have been filled with forebodings, believing that there is a growing weakening of the authority of the States, undermining and destroying the stability of the Federal Union, and destructive of the permanency of the States themselves . . .

I am confident that patriotic leadership of the country will preserve, subject only to such changes as present emergencies render imperative, the political prerogatives which the American people have ever exercised and treasured as their valued heritage. I am confident that such patriotic leadership is to be found in my party. The Republican Party is not dead. It is very much alive—alive to its responsibilities to the people. It will be conservative without stagnation, progressive without radicalism, and through it permanency of prosperity will come.

Recent, and to the majority of the people, unexpected developments in connection with the State's finances make it most imperative upon me, at this time, to impress upon you the mandate of the people directed to us all for a complete, searching and impartial investigation of the affairs of every department of the State. * * *

If I measure the temper of people aright, to evade or temporize in this connection, will not be countenanced. I propose to submit to you legislation empowering me to appoint a commission of three, with inquisitorial powers, supported by an appropriation necessary to the complete and satisfactory performance of the work to be done * * *

There is an unrest throughout the State, and necessary expenditures will be justified so long as the investigation discloses the true facts. In the event no waste, extravagance, mismanagement or irregularities are disclosed, we shall, at least have secured the quieting of the public mind. Should extravagance in the State's affairs be discovered it can be checked; should mismanagement be disclosed, it can corrected; should the method of administration be found to be erroneous, a new form of coordination and functioning of State departments may be adopted. Concerning other irregularities detrimental to the public service which may be brought to light, proper and remedial legislation may be enacted at your next session.

The responsibility of this investigation is mine. Assuming such responsibility, I feel justified in asking of you that I be vested with authority to name the members of the commission.

You may rest assured that I shall select for this commission men of the utmost integrity, unbiased and free from political combination, in whose ability and character you will have complete confidence and upon whose findings you may unhesitatingly rely.

Having expressed to you my thoughts and hopes for the solution of some of the many problems that have been cast upon us, and which it is our bounden duty to solve in the interests of our people, I call upon you and all the citizens of Maryland to aid me in the great task ahead of me. I need your help, advice and moral support. When you think I am right, commend me; when you feel that I am mistaken, tell me.

By Warren A. McNeill
(Associated Press Staff Writer).

This is another of a series in which State officials tell about their part in carrying out the functions of the State government.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 9.—Almost "every question man can raise, every phrase of every phase" of Virginia utility rates may be settled by referring to the "files" of the State corporation commission presided over by William C. Seibert, assistant commerce counsel and rate clerk.

In this office railroads and shiplines must file schedules of the services they offer for passengers and freight along with lists of charges made on all movements of commodities within the State. Bridge companies also must file their rates.

Then if some passenger or shipper complains of not receiving proper service or if a question arises as to whether or not improper charges have been made, this division of the commission checks with its records and informs the complainant his plea is not justified or else takes up the matter with the corporation involved, if there appears to be cause for complaint.

Other Functions.

Or if a railroad wants to discontinue a train, or a station, or an express company wants to discontinue an agency; if the rate on some commodity is to be raised or lowered, or the special tariff is to be discontinued; or if there is a question as to charges for demurrage or other special services, this office is called upon to investigate, and possibly to prepare an order for issue by the commission, or else to participate in a hearing at which interested parties may give their views on the proposed change.

In addition to handling the rate files, Mr. Siebert acts as assistant to H. E. Ketner, commerce counsel, in one of the most important of the commission's functions, namely, the protection of Virginia interests against unfavorable decisions in cases coming before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Actions of Companies.

When railroads, express companies, ship lines, power companies or other public utilities engaged in interstate commerce and doing business in Virginia enter an action before the Federal regulatory body it is the duty of Mr. Ketner and Mr. Seibert, under direction of the members of the corporation commission to determine what interest this State, its citizens and its industries have in the matter. Then it may be necessary to file briefs, attend and argue at hearings or to arrange for the assembling and presentation of evidence.

One of the more important of these cases is now pending, involving a general freight rate increase asked by railroads which, if granted, will cost Virginia shippers several million dollars a year.

Mr. Ketner has participated in the various developments of this case, submitting a lengthy brief and presenting, with the aid of specially employed counsel, more than a score of witnesses to represent Virginia interests.

It is pointed out that the fact that Virginia lies in two rate territories always has caused more than usual difficulty in establishing rates for State-wide application. That portion of the State north of the main line of the Norfolk & Western Railway is in what is known as "official classification territory" and the remainder is in the "southern classification territory."

The differing rates both for intrastate and interstate traffic give rise to constant litigation before the Virginia commission as well as the Interstate Commerce Commission. When these cases involve such important matters as rates on fertilizer, vegetables, coal or other important products of this State, the work of the commission's commerce counsel becomes of major importance.

(In the next article of this series to be published by The Post on Saturday, functions of the commission, supervised by Mr. Ozlin, will be discussed.)

Light Rate Cut Stirs a Dispute At Cumberland

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—A colloquy unexpectedly arose in the city council here between Mayor George W. Legge and former Councilman Isaac Hirsch when the mayor refused to sign an order offered by Mr. Hirsch that would have placed the council on record as objecting to only a 10 per cent reduction in electric light rates as ordered by the public service commission. Mr. Hirsch is chairman of the citizens committee created by the council to investigate the rate question. He contends that the proposed reduction is too small. The order also proposed a referendum on the question of building a municipal lighting plant.

Mayor Legge declared that Mr. Hirsch had dictated the order and presented it for his approval. He objected on the ground that the action was premature, that the rate scale had not yet been established by the Potomac Edison Co., and that, as many local people are stockholders and bondholders, the matter of establishing a municipal plant was a serious one. He declared it was his policy to compose his own orders. Many local people, he averred, were employed by the Potomac Edison Co. He contended the council should not act hastily.

City Councilmen Edgar Reynolds and Harry W. Matheney indicated they are in favor of a municipal lighting plant if the city receives only 10 per cent reduction. Mr. Hirsch declared he was content to let his suggested order go by default, but its passage would prevent "locking the stable after the horse is stolen."

State Senator Robert B. Kimble, who, as a member of the House of Delegates two years ago, introduced a bill calling for a referendum on the question of establishing a municipal lighting plant, states that the proposed 10 per cent cut is too small and that unless the Potomac Edison Company grants a "reasonable rate," he, as president of the Public Ownership League, will start holding meetings at once in an effort to secure the support of citizens and will reintroduce a bill calling for a special election in May to pass on a municipal plant referendum.

A survey by engineers employed by the city shows a plant would cost $1,500,000 and it is thought the city could obtain a Federal grant of about 30 per cent.

Apple Import Rise Sought of France

The United States is making strong representations to France to have the American apple import quota restored to the amount prevailing during the last few months of 1934, according to the Associated Press.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, and Representatives of the Pacific Northwestern States are pressing the State Department to implore the French government to lower, at least in part, the barrier erected against the American fruit. France is one of the United States' best apple customers.

Higher quotas prevailed during the fall months of 1934 after an increase in Franc's wine quota here.

Funeral arrangements has not yet been completed last night, but the aged woman's body will be taken back to Madison County for burial.

West Virginia's House, Senate Start Session

Legislature to Organize Today; Governor Offers Program.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 9 (AP).—The Legislature abandoned today its plan to adjourn until Monday and will return tomorrow and complete organization before going to work on legislation outlined by Gov. H. G. Kump as his hopes for the future of the administration.

The Governor, who declared the leaders selected by Democratic caucus "will serve well," told a joint session of the House and Senate he is ready to go ahead with plans made before he became Governor, and recommended:

State monopoly of liquor sales with local option.

Adoption of a net income tax to replace the gross income tax.

Encouragement of wage-paying industries, remembering that "the great economic groups" have paid more than "one half of State aid" for free schools.

Establishment of a department of purchasing as a permanent agency.

Appointment of a budget and personnel officer.

Democratic majorities controlling both branches elected all the major officers at noon, including Speaker John J. Pelter, of Logan County, and Senate President Charles E. Hodges, of Monongalia.

Tomorrow the House hopes to get rid of one of the troublesome questions at the beginning of each session—patronage—through selection of the dozens of clerks, pages and committee clerks who will carry on the clerical work.

The Senate meanwhile expects merely to meet and adjourn until Monday pending appointment of committees to steer its course through the anticipated flood of proposed new laws.

One committee already has been named by Speaker Pelter. It is the rules committee which will pass upon all points of procedure. Its members, headed by Speaker Pelter as ex-officio chairman, are Delegates I. N. Underwood, of Tyler; A. J. Welton, of Grant, Republicans, and W. M. Lafon, of Monroe; Ernest K. James, of Kanawha; Ralph M. Hiner, of Pendleton; Junius Strouss, of Monongalia, and Joe G. Gentry, of Cabell, all Democrats.

Japan Banned Picture Brides, Letters Reveal

(Associated Press.)

The "inside story" of Japan's diplomatic sacrifice of its "picture birdes" as a maneuver to end agitation for exclusion of Japanese laborers from the United States and Improve Relations, is revealed in a volume of American diplomatic correspondence for 1919 just made public by the State Department.

The correspondence was brought to a close with Japan's announcement that it would in the future refuse to issue pasaports to "picture brides" intending to proceed to the United States.

Phelan Started Fight.

Agitation against admittance of the "picture brides" was raised by Senator James D. Phelan, of California, who declared that some, at least, weer coming to this country as the wives of children of Japanese laborers who were here prior to the "gentleman's agreement" of 1908.

Ambassador Morris, telegraphing from Tokyo, advised the State Department that "there is a notable growth of a spirit of antagonism to America and Americans" as a result of the Senate's action on Shantung, considered inimical to Japan.

Morris explained he was receiving reports from various parts of Japan indicating "that popular feeling is running strongly against the United States," and was being used by Jingo elements to obtain increased army and navy appropriations.

Warns of "Crisis."

"I have deemed it my duty to point out," Morris declared, "that the question of discrimination against the Japanese people in California is one which profoundly affects Japanese pride and sentiment, and any action by California at this time, when public feeling in Japan is generally antagonistic, would lead to an extremely serious crisis.

"In a recent conversation, Mr. Hanihara (Japanese minister of foreign affairs) expressed to me the concern he personally felt about the California situation, and his fear that Gov. Stephens of California might not be able to withstand the popular agitation now going on."

Hanihara then told him, Morris reported, that the Japanese Association of California had "practically stopped of its own accord the further immigration of picture brides."

Government Approval.

Hanihara declared that that move "would receive, without formal action, the tacit and effective support of the Japanese government," and pointed out "that the resolution gave the Japanese government an excellent opportunity to support a movement of its own people in a case where it could not act under pressure from outside."

Secretary of State Lansing, in a telegram to Ambassador Morris, said:

"In order to avoid the adverse effects on the relations between Japan and America which would result from either holding that such marriages are illegal or from the enactment of legislation which has been proposed, I informally advised the Japanese Ambassador on November 20, 1919, that as a matter of policy it would be wise for Japan to prevent abuses of this system, and I answered affirmatively his informal inquiry whether it would have a good effect if the Japanese government were to prohibit the entry of the picture brides into the United States."

By December 13 the sugestion had been digested and approved by the Japanese government and Ambassador Shidehara notified Secretary Lansing that:

"The Japanese government, placing supreme importance upon the promotion of friendly relations between Japan and the Unite States, and having carefully examined in that spirit the situation created by the so-called 'picture brides,' have decided to adopt measures for the prohibition of such brides from proceeding to the continental United States."

Ickes Removes Agent and Aid

A. F. Reaney, William Nix, Kanssa City Officers, Suspended.

Secretary Ickes yesterday suspended A. F. Reaney, special agent in charge of the Kansas City office of the Interior Department division of investigation, "for the good of the service," the Associated Press reports.

Ickes also suspended William T. Nix, chief clerk in the Kansas City office, on the same grounds.

No comment was made on reasons for the action, except that the suspensions would be followed by filing of formal charges.

Press of Virginia Criticizes Codes

Report Violations, NRA Heads Ask at Meeting.

Lynchburg, Jan. 9 (AP).—Hardships suffered by commercial printers and publishers of weekly newspapers as a result of the NRA codes were brought under discussion this afternoon at the concluding session of the Virginia Press Association.

Despite their willingness to cooperate with the Recovery Administration, the publishers said, their business has been impaired since they have tried to live up to code requirements while others have not. Beyond a general discussion of the subject, however, little could be done. Representatives of the code authorities from Virginia, North Carolina and Maryland were present and advised the publishers to help bring violators of codes to the attention of the proper officials.

At the morning session today members of the association heard Joseph T. Mackey, vice president and treasurer of the Mergenthaler Linotype Co., declare that newspapers are the best medium through which business concerns can restore prosperity. He quoted Roger W. Babson, economist and statistician, as saying that newspapers will play a "tremendous part on the march toward economic and political greatness."

Free Ride

Governor Hitches to Richmond but Hides Thumb.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 9 (AP).—Gov. Peery not only was caught in the dense fog which blanketed Virginia highways last night, but he was forced to "bum a ride." He insisted today, however, that he did not violate the State hitch-hiking law.

Leaving Washington late yesterday afternoon with the expectation of reaching Richmond by 8 p. m. the executive's car stalled near Triangle not far from Quantico. A passing motorist stopped, the Governor said, without being hailed or asked for a ride, furnished a "lift" to Triangle and from there the Governor rode a bus to Fredericksburg after arranging to have his balky car towed to Quantico.

At Fredericksburg he found a Kiwanis meeting in session and at its conclusion became the passenger of W. B. F. Cole for the remainder of the trip to Richmond, but did not arrive at the executive mansion until approximately 1 a. m.

Asked if there was any trouble causing his car to break down, the Governor asked: "Did you ever have a horse balk with you? Well, the car stopped just like that. It just wouldn't go."

Joseph O'Lone Heads Columbia Typo Union

Joseph P. O'Lone was elected president of Columbia Typographical Union yesterday at a special balloting to select a successor for Clyde M. Mills, who resigned to take a post as labor adviser to the Graphic Arts Code, NRA.

O'Lone defeated three other candidates: Frank S. Lerch, 678 votes; Earle A. Reid, 370 votes, and Adolph Majower, 110 votes. The successful candidate polled 785 votes.

Pact Wasn't Abrogated, Miyaoka States in Address Here.

"There is absolutely no grounds for the belief that Japan is building a navy, which is out of proportion or planning a war 4,500 miles across the ocean.

Some 250 Rotarians, assembled in the Willard Hotel's big ballroom for their weekly luncheon, heard one of their international directors make that statement yesterday. He was Tsunejiro Miyaoka, formerly Japanese Minister to the United States, who stopped off here to defend his country's foreign policy while en route to a Rotary directors' meeting in Chicago.

Some newspaper accounts of Japan's denunciation of the Washington Naval Treaty, which provides for the celebrated 5-5-3 ratio, have created a false impression, the speaker said.

Denies Treaty Abrogated.

"Japan has not abrogated or renounced the treaty,'" he stated, waving his short arms in emphasis, "and it has no intention of doing so."

Mr. Miyaoka, who has conducted a private law practice in Japan since resigning from government service in 1909, speaks English clearly. His audience of bankers, doctors, restaurateurs, advertising salesmen, lawyers and others gave close attention.

He drew the analogy of an individual who has a lease on a house. The agreement may be renewed or it may be terminated upon, say, a year's notice. If the lessee chooses to end the contract and complies with the notice provision, his action can not be interpreted as abrogation or renunciation, said Mr. Miyaoka.

Hailing his emperor as a "fountain of honor," the speaker pointed out that he rules under a system which provides too many checks and safeguards to make possible the development of a navy that exceeds budgetary limitations and actual needs.

Sees Excess Commotion.

Besides, there is altogether too much commotion over naval questions, more than their importance warrant, the diminutive envoy declared.

"I shall ask Mr. Fleming, president of Riggs National Bank, whether or not he agrees with me that the monetary situation is more important than all this idle talk about navies."

Mr. Miyaoka paused for just a moment, long enough to be rewarded with a definitely affirmative nod of the head by Mr. Fleming, who was seated immediately in front of the speaker.

Dr. Chester D. Swope, president of the Washington Rotary Club, introduced Mr. Miyaoka and Keinosuke Fujii, counselor of the Japanese Embassy, at the opening of the program.

Born in Osaka 69 years ago, Mr. Miyaoka's most outstanding appointment in recent years came in 1928, when President Coolidge named him as the American national member of the permanent international commission provided for in the treaty between this country and Uruguay for the advancement of peace.

Highway Expense Reported Slashed

Rhodes Sees Overdraft Reduction to $1,000,000.

Richmond, Jan. 9 (AP).—The latest revenue figures given out today by John Q. Rhodes, director of the division of motor vehicles, indicate that the highway department may complete the present fiscal year with an overdraft of approximately $1,000,000 rather than the nearly $2,700,000 previously estimated by Highway Commissioner H. G. Shirley.

For the calendar year, 1934, Mr. Rhodes said, motor vehicle revenues, including the gas tax, amounted to $18,173,528.32, a gain of $462,600.37 over 1933.

Mr. Shirley's budget estimates were based on a figure of $16,560,000 for the fiscal year 1934, and on this basis he expected to have to dig deeply into funds for the ensuing year to carry out this year's program. With the prospective overdraft reduced to $1,000,000, however, prospects are much brighter for the department being able to match $2,278,000 in Federal aid road funds tentatively allocated to Virginia for the 1935-36 year.

Japan Renews Its Drive in U.S. For Navy Pact

Yamaguchi at New York Voices Tokyo Aim for an Agreement.

New York, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—Japan's renewed campaign in the United States for a naval agreement giving her equality with this country and Britain was launched today.

Capt. Tamon Yamaguchi, Japanese naval attache in the embassy at Washington, declared in a significant address that Tokyo's ambition, now that the Washington treaty of 1922 had been scrapped by Japan, was to come to a "new agreement which will embody the proposals Japan has made in London for the sake of peace, not only in eastern Asia, but throughout the world."

Yamaguchi emphasized the rapid strides being made in naval equipment, the speed of modern-day ships, and particularly the development of aviation, which, he said, destroyed the security which Japan's navy, under a 5-5-3 ratio with America and Britain, might have had 13 years ago. He said these improvements made it essential for Japan to scrap the Washington treaty, and intimated she was ready to act alone, if forced to do so by the United States and Britain, in naval construction.

The Japanese Embassy has requested full information from the State Department, the Associated Press reports, on the detention of Lieut. Comdr. Yoshio Matsuda in St. Petersburg, Fla., after he had been discovered making motion pictures of the harbor there.

State Department officials said yesterday a secretary of the embassy had discussed the case with the Division of Far Eastern Affairs, but that no formal representations had been made.

The embassy, it was explained, desired complete information in order to make a report to the foreign office in Tokyo.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

ADDED to the long list of personnel irregularities at Federal Housing Administration is the denial of the right of the employes to organize an FHA union, such as exist in the scores of other Government agencies with approval of the officials.

BAKER.

This was revealed last night by E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, which has 166 lodges throughout the service and is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

An employe of high qualifications, Mr. Babcock said, started to organize an AFGE lodge at FHA several months ago and was summarily dismissed. In the face of certain dismissal for other FHA employes attempting to form a lodge, Mr. Babcock stated he has abandoned, temporarily, plans for establishing a unit in that agency as he does not want to make martyrs of any workers.

Such intimidation of labor leaders is held to be unfair to FHA employes and to the taxpayers.

FHA officials repeatedly have declared that the volume of work does not justify a larger staff, these declarations running concurrently with overtime work ever since the founding of the office in July.

Typical of the inconsistent statements emanating from FHA executive offices was that of Theodore Nickson, of Virginia, FHA comptroller, to the writer, in effect:

"We don't need any more employes. The Federal Housing program is well under way and the FHA is functioning smoothly with the present number of employes."

Then less than 60 seconds later Comptroller Nickson admitted that his staff "frequently worked until 3 o'clock in the morning."

Reallocation of 270 junior patent examiners from Grade P-1 to P-2 with salary increases from $2,000 to $2,600 a year was announced to the examiners by Conway P. Coe, commissioner of patents, yesterday afternoon.

Eight New Lodges.

Eight new lodges have been added to the roster of the American Federation of Government Employes, it was announced at AFGE headquarters last night. The new units are:

No. 159, Springfield, Mo.; No. 180, Erie, Pa.; No. 161, Port Birmingham, Ala.; No. 162, Rochester, N. Y.; No. 163, Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; No. 164, Buffalo, N. Y.; No. 165, Battle Creek (Camp Custer), Mich.; and No. 166, Naval Clothing Depot, New York.

Federation Being Organized.

Representatives of local unions of the National Federation of Federal Employes in New York State will meet today in Troy to formulate plans for the organization of the New York State Federation of Federal Employes Unions, it was announced yesterday by Miss Gertrude M. McNally, NFFE secretary-treasurer.

The temporary chairman of the meeting will be John P. Cloud, well known to Federal employes here for his successful organization work in behalf of the NFFE.

Miss McNally pointed out that the State federations are playing an increasingly important part in the work of the NFFE. She stated further that plans are under way for the organization of several additional central bodies throughout the country. The NFFE already has State federations active in the District and 13 States, Miss McNally said.

MEMBERS of the Biological Society of Washington will hear illustrated lectures by three biologists representing three departments of the Federal Government when they assemble at the Cosmos Club at 8 p. m. Saturday, in their 310th regular meeting.

Edwin C. McKee, National Park Service, will give a popular resume of the effect of certain ecological factors of the Grand Canyon on plant and animal life.

Dr. Paul Bartsch, National Museum, who has been heard many times by local audiences, will present a resurvey of the problem of the host relationships and importance of the Asiatic blood fluke.

Anti-Nazis Ask Saar's Division If Vote Is Lost

Protest 'Terrorism,' Urge Its Consideration in Interpreting Result.

Saarbruecken, Saar Basin Territory, Jan. 9 (AP).—A move to have the Saar divided into two parts if it votes to return to Germany at Sunday's plebiscite got under way tonight as anti-Nazis protested to the League of Nations against alleged Nazi "terrorism."

The league, the protest said, "must take existing terrorism into consideration when it interprets the final result of the plebiscite."

Partition of the territory was not specifically mentioned, but leaders of the (anti-Nazi) common front said that was what they meant.

The protest placed on the (Nazi) German front all the blame for recent disorders in the Saar. Tonight however, a Nazi reported stabbed by two Communists at Altenwald after the breakup of a German front meeting there.

Police Patrol Streets.

International police quickly occupied the streets of Altenwald to prevent an outbreak such as that in Saarbruecken today when open fighting between Nazis and anti-Nazis, though quickly quelled by alert police, served to emphasize the tenseness gripping the region.

Numerous minor disorders happen almost daily throughout the territory, but so far none has had serious consequences.

The antiNazi communication to the league was interpreted as an effort to start the league council thinking about what to do if supporters of the status quo (continuance of league government) prove to constitute a large minority of the voters.

The common front leaders asserted the best protection for the voters against Germany would be division of the territory so as to provide a place for them to live under the league guarantee.

A minor victory for Communists in one of the numerous nonviolent skirmishes between the conflicting sides was registered, meanwhile, as Nazi officials decided to postpone temporarily ousting them from the building they occupy in Saarbruecken.

Samuel:
When we go to work
We needn't sit on thrones,
But we do crave space
To park our bones;
And we would like room
To move our chairs,
Without getting involved
In our neighbors' affairs.
We are not sardines—
So the can arrangement
Only breeds contempt
And causes estrangement.

3 'At Homes' Are Attended By Hundreds

Mrs. Hull, Mrs. Dern and Mrs. Morgenthau Give Receptions.

First Official Calls of Year Made by Society Members.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Almost every member of Capital society was to be found yesterday afternoon in one of three places making their first official call of the season on the wives of the three Cabinet officers who received. At each place many of the same people met to exchange pleasantries. First, they went to Chevy Chase to call on the Secretary of War and Mrs. George H. Dern at Highwood, the charming home which they have occupied since their arrival.

Set far back from the street in a grove of trees, the bright lights of the house offered a delightful welcome from the chilly dampness. Lines of cars were efficiently kept moving by a number of uniformed soldiers. Bright fires burned cheerfully in the large rooms, and in one drawing rom Mrs. Dern was receiving, assisted by Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, wife of the Assistant Secretary of War. Mrs. Dern wore a smart black frock trimmed with touches of white, and pretty Mrs. Woodring was also in black with a small hat to match, setting off her ash blonde hair.

Guests Admire Portrait.

In the large entrance hall the Secretary chatted with many of his guests who paused to admire the excellent portrait by Salzbrenner which hangs over the mantel. Secretary Dern explained that Mr. Salzbrenner has done another which is in his office and which he prefers. The artist says the one at Highwood is a painting of the Secretary of War, while the other is a study of George H. Dern!

In the dining room, where the tea table was decorated with bowls of yellow jonquils, Mrs. Harry Baxter and Miss Betsy Dern, daughters of Secretary and Mrs. Dern, assisted, while a group of distinguished women presided in turn at the tea and coffee urns. Mrs. Baxter wore a gown of black crystelle velvet with a bodice of soft rose pink, and Miss Dern was in a frock of black and silver metal cloth.

Diplomats, officials, and members of the service and residents gathered in the cheerful house, lingering until the last moment when they must leave to make their next call. Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, wife of the former Secretary of War, was there in black woolen with a high-crowned Russian turban, and silver fox furs. Baroness Beck-Friis, also smart in black, and Frau Leitner, wife of the Counselor of the German Embassy, was introducing the pretty Frau Scholz, wife of the new First Secretary of the Embassy, to her many friends. Frau Scholz is tall and slender with beautiful blonde hair, and yesterday was in black. She and her husband will move to their new home on Cleveland avenue after the middle of the month. At present they are stopping at the Mayflower.

Mrs. Morgenthau Wears Velvet.

At the home of the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry A. Morgenthau, jr., on Kalorama road, another reception was in progress. The house which Mr. and Mrs. Morgenthau have leased from Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm McConihe is a charming and homelike place, and yesterday the reception was just that. Mrs. Morgenthau was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, wife of the Undersecretary of the Treasury, and later in the afternoon the Secretary joined them. Mrs. Morgenthau wore a hostess gown of rich crimson velvet with a necklace of antique gold, and Mrs. Coolidge was in a simple black frock ornament with a single white flower.

Young Joan Morgenthau, wearing a silk frock of pale rose color, trimmed with dainty white collar and cuffs, and her dark hair banded with a rose ribbon, was there greeting guests, who stopped to admire her lovely red Cocker spaniel, Timmy, sitting quietly and artistically on a rose-brocaded chair and accepted the attention of the guests. There was a brief excitement when the handsome Persian cat, which belongs to neighbors, dropped in unexpectedly, but according to Joan it is a frequent visitor.

Most of the guests gathered around the tea table where a group of ladies alternated at serving, and the conversation of nearly all had to do with surmises as to where Mrs. Morgenthau obtained the recipe for the most delicious hot cinnamon buns ever tasted.

Among the guests were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark L. Bristol. Mrs. James Clement Dunn, wife of the Chief of the Protocol Division of the State Department, who was bound for the Derns, and Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, who stopped for a moment to chat with Miss Anne Squire, who was assisting.

Several Hundred Guests.

And then to the Carlton to greet Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State. It was rather late, but still a large gathering of guests remained. Mrs. Hull wore a black afternoon frock trimmed with narrow bands of silver paillettes, and a corsage of purple violets with a center of red rosebuds. Diplomats and members of the State Department again mingled with the several hundred guests.

Mrs. Alexander Weddell, charming wife of the United States Ambassador to the Argentine, was there with her husband and surrounded by a group of friends who wanted to know how much longer they are remaining in Washington. Nearby were the French Ambassador and Mme. de Laboulaye, just making their farewells before going to the Netherlands Legation to the debut of Mlle. Nora van Haersma de With.

Mme. de With and the debutante greeted their friends in the sitting room, after which most of the guests assembled in the dining room. A cloth of filet and embroidery covered the long table, resplendent with silver candelabra and tea services, and decorated with salmon-colored roses.

The Swedish Minister and Mrs. Bostrom were leaving just as Mrs. Bewley, who wore brown satin, and Mrs. Heyward, of the British Embassy, appeared. Admiral and Mrs. Bristol were talking to Mrs. Frank Simonds. The Italian Embasy was represented by Marchesa Rossi-Longhi and Col. and Signora Paolo Sbernadori, the latter all in black.

Senora de Espil was chic in a black frock with a jabot of large silver sequins. Mrs. Hamilton Wright came with Miss Barbara Wright, who was in a directoire costume; Miss Rosalind Wright wore a turquoise blue jumper frock; the youngest daughter, Mrs. Reid, was accompanied by her husband, Group Capt. G. R. M. Reid, of the British Embassy. Shops Display Many Objects At Low Prices

By Ruth Anne Davis.

JANUARY is a good month for sales. Those whose budgets weren't too strained by Christmas shopping are in luck now. Many items which we looked at with longing eyes in December are now within easy reach of our purses.

In the gift section of an F street store you'll find it impossible to resist many of the vastly reduced objects. Here several tables are devoted to displays of sales goods and you can see by the price tags that bargains are here in swarms.

For instance, on $1.95 tables are a cocktail shaker, tall, and gracefully modernistic, that once sold for $3; a silver metal flask in a black leather case, once $4; and a large framed ship print which recently was $7.50.

On the 79-cent table are a silver-plated sugar bowl, an immense beer stein which might be used for a pitcher or a vase; brass tea urns and alabaster ash trays, all formerly more expensive.

A table devoted to merchandise reduced to $1 boasts a magnificent black and chrome cocktail shaker, quart size; several leather boxes, reproductions of imported hand-tooled goods; small desk lamps, a wooden pipe holder and candlesticks.

Aside from the displays on the tables is a table itself reduced from $50 to $29.75. This is beautifully carved teakwood with a round marble inset in the top.

Scarf Prices Reduced.

A January sale in another F street shop has boosted the popularity of scarfs. Here boucle and rabbit's hair scarfs; the long oblong type that wraps so cozily and snugly around your neck, are down from $1 to 39 cents. These come in solid white, black, brown, rust, yellow, blue and in myriad colored plaids and stripes.

Liquid Cosmetics.

Why not put your complexion on a liquid diet and take advantage of an excellent cosmetic? For 59 cents you may purchase a facial set which includes a liquid skin cream, excellent for the casual treatment of dry skins, a cleansing fluid with a lot of real get-up and go to it, and a clear purplish liquid for tightening and firming the skin.

Extra Long Garment Bags.

Women who buy garment bags for the safekeeping of their frocks often find when they reach home that the frock is longer than the bag and wrinkles around the hem when it's hung up inside.

The buyer of a certain notions department has experienced this difficulty herself and was in ready sympathy with the complaint of customers. Not being able to buy garment bags of a preferred length, she ordered some made to suit the long dresses. These have just arrived and are simply ideal! They are 63 inches long and amply large to hold half a dozen or more frocks. They're available in dark and light printed glazed chintz.

Perfumed Hand Cream.

Soap and water have a tendency to dry the skin so pity the poor little hands. A dozen times a day they are in and out of soap and water. And yet we lament and scold when they show tendencies to become hard and scaly or red and rough.

A certain manufacturer with a positive genius for turning out extra fine products at low prices is sponsor for a splendid hand cream delicately perfumed with voilets. This contains no grease and is not sticky. The minute you rub a tiny dab on your hands the skin literally soaks it up. And it costs only 25 cents!

Small Carpet Sweepers.

Easy to roll, light to handle, and a very thorough worker—that's one of the small carpet sweepers selling for $1.25 in a local store.

Women who do their own housework in small apartments will find that one of these sweepers will save them daily drudgery with a broom and do an excellent job of cleaning their rugs of dust, dirt, threads and small bits of this or that.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 105, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Women's Duty Is to Solve Problems Of the Present, Says Mrs. Gruening

Editor's Wife Has Long Been Leader of Women Voters.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

Underwood & Underwood.

Helping to solve national problems is not only the privilege but the responsibility of women, in the belief of Mrs. Ernest Gruening, who has done noteworthy work with the League of Women Voters in Maine and in New York.

TOO MANY WOMEN who fought for "equal rights" back in the presuffrage days are now resting on their laurels without attempting to help solve present social and economic questions.

This is an observation of Mrs. Ernest Gruening, wife of the editor who is now director of the territories and islands. Mrs. Gruening, long a leader in the League of Women Voters, believes it is not only the privilege, but the duty of women to take an active part in government.

"At least to the extent of voting intelligently," she said. "The average woman of today is, of course, more vitally interested in public questions than was the average woman of two decades ago. But it is to be regretted that many women who were active in the fight for suffrage now sit back and don't even take the trouble to vote." In this connection she mentioned the work of the League of Women Voters in promoting intelligent voting among women.

Active Child Welfare Worker.

Mrs. Gruening has been an active member of this organization for a number of years. During the years when her husband was editor of the Portland Evening News she was the child welfare chairman for Maine. Later moving to New York, she became chairman of the committee on living costs for the New York City branch of the league. Now in Washington, she is still an active worker in that organization.

Discussing the responsibility of women in helping to solve national problems, Mrs. Gruening expressed the opinion that much more effective work could be done if such organizations as the League of Women Voters and the National Woman's Party could unite in their efforts to strengthen the position of women.

"Both organizations have been greatly beneficial in this respect so far," she said, "even though many of their projects have been along different lines. While the League of Women Voters has been principally concerned with promoting intelligent voting among women, the National Woman's Party has done excellent work in promoting Pan-American amity and unity and in compiling State laws, pointing out, in numerous cases, their complexity and unfairness to women."

Mrs. Gruening's own interest in the woman's movement and legislation probably had its origin in her college days at Vassar, when she was in the same class with Inez Milholland, widely known feminist (and the first wife of Eugen Boissevain, who is now the husband of Edna St. Vincent Millay). Also at Vassar as a member of the faculty at that time was Miss Alice Barrows, who, as a member of the English department, taught debating.

Suffrage Chief Topic.

"As I remember it, our chief subject of debate was woman's suffrage. We discussed that in all its phases often and long."

But the "Dorothy Smith" of Vassar who was later to become Mrs. Ernest Gruening also had other interests. She was determined, for instance, to have a career. And that career was to be music.

But after studying voice for two years, she married and, in her own words "buried my talent in a napkin." (She laughed, her soft mouth curving into a smile.) "I always meant to take it out and shine it up, but I never found the time. First there was my home to take up my time, and then my sons.

But recently, she has taken up another hobby—painting. She finished her first picture this last summer in Cuba, where she went with her husband (who was one of the 15 experts sent by the Foreign Policy Association to make a study of the Cuban situation).

"While my husband was so busy, I discovered that for once in my life I had plenty of leisure," she explained. "So I began painting."

Skeleton-Type Shoe Is Shown At Convention

A trend toward lower heels was evident in virtually all the 300 exhibits, the increasingly popular two-inch heel being featured consistently. Round-toe and flat-heeled slippers were shown for street, evening and beach wear.

The most discussed newcomer was a skeleton-type sandal, cut higher over the instep. Described as a charioteer or Grecian sandal, the shoe is held to the foot with narrow bands held in place with a T-strap. This model was shown both with low heels for daytime wear and higher heels for evening.

Another skeleton-type shoe exhibited was designed with narrow bands of leather woven in a loose lattice pattern. The open work theme was developed less extravagantly in pastel, buck and linen pumps or ties with perforations embroidered in colored threads. Brass eyelets served as decoration in other types.

Bright blues, frequently combined with darker shades, were stressed in a number of models, both in leather and linen. Bright blue or brown linen with white kid trim were given prominence in the afternoon group.

Shoes of checked or plaid linens and basket weave cottons were offered among the novelties, which included a pair of red and blue gingham plaid pumps.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

MANY schools use newspapers for instruction in current events, but this is only the beginning of the educational opportunities the daily press affords. A Midwestern newspaper has just published a 35-page booklet showing how almost every page of a daily newspaper can be used in classroom work. Many of the suggestions are entirely adaptable to home study and entertainment.

Trade symbols which appear regularly in advertisements can be cut out and pasted on cardboard to teach the very young child to recognize the shapes of circles, squares, parallelograms and other geometric figures. The child later can clip pictures of modernistic furniture from department store advertisements which show how these same figures appear in familiar articles such as bureaus, kitchen stools and pictures.

When you want to entertain a child of five, give him a newspaper and ask him to clip from it pictures of articles which appear in the kitchen. These later can be made into scrap-books. Home decoration features also make attractive scrap-books.

The girl who likes to cook will increase her knowledge by following the recipes in the cookery column.

The boy who is studying Latin, and not doing any too well in it, will profit by home study if his mother asks him to underline the words in the newspaper that have a Latin derivation.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Will you help me with my problem—a silly one, no doubt?

A year and a half ago we left this city and lived far away among strangers. Upon returning we were rather shocked to find a certain group of friends who used to be practically nondrinkers, cocktailing and eggnogging endlessly. We have been invited to several of their dinners and bridge parties. Now we must entertain in return. What shall we do about cocktails and wine?

* * * *

Neither my husband nor I care to drink, and have never even had a bottle of wine in our house.

Has the cocktail before dinner become an established custom, essential to good taste?

* * * *

I do not drink cocktails, although I do take some wine to be congenial. My husband has been accepting both for the same reason, although he dislikes the former and prefers not to have it.

I know you are capable of an unbiased reply, for which I thank you. BLUE STOCKINGS.

There Is Alternative.

DEAR BLUE STOCKING: The person who obligingly manages, as guest, to disguise a definite distaste both for alcoholic beverages and the custom of serving them, has an even greater obligation to maintain a consistently cooperative attitude when playing the role of host, it seems to me.

* * * *

Since you do not drink cocktails and your husband dislikes them, but both of you tolerate wine for each course; or if one met through serving an excellent sherry both before and during dinner, except for the meat course, when burgundy, claret, or champagne, may be offered.

There is, of course, a rather strict traditional etiquette governing the serving of wines with formal dinners. If the hostess elects to serve a variety of wines, there is a specific wine for each course; or, if one beverage only is to be served throughout the meal, that one beverage must be champagne. Or so says the blue book of social usage.

* * * *

Many modern hostesses, however, thoroughly accustomed to the usages of the best society, blandly follow the dictates of their own good taste and good judgment in the matter of blending food and drink. And the custom of serving sherry preceding and during a rather small, informal dinner, is a more or less recent innovation among those who establish authentic social precedents.

Needless to say, the first characteristic of the successful host is a selfless consideration of his guests' preferences in the matter of entertaining. He never attempts to convey a moral preachment, however subtly, when entertaining; nor does he, by the slightest commission or omission, play off his personal preferences against those of his guests.

* * * *

While I have outlined here the conventionally acceptable alternatives to serving cocktails before dinner, I really believe the most tactful procedure would be simply to serve, before dinner, those cocktails to which your friends are accustomed and committed. Sherry may be offered at the same time, for the benefit of host and hostess and others to whose palate it may chance to appeal.

Has the cocktail before dinner become an established social custom, essential to good taste? By popular acceptance, it has become a rather securely established social custom, quite within the bounds of good taste, but certainly it could not be said to be "essential to good taste." M. H.

This Coat Can Be Made In 10 Hours With Ease

Pattern No. 582.

WHEN THEY OUTGROW or outwear their coats, and the budget hasn't allowed for a new one, why not start sewing? Today's design for a double-breasted coat is easy to sew. One very amateur needlewoman reports that it took her about ten hours to make this coat, including interlining and lining. It may have a tiny fur collar, modest enough for any youngster, or a cunning cape and matching leggings. An interlining is optional.

Sizes are 1 to 6. Size 6, coat without cape or leggins, requires 1¾ yards of 54-inch material, 1¼ yards of 39-inch fabric for lining, 1 yard of 54-inch interlining. Yardage for size 2, coat, cape and leggings, 1¾ yards of 54-inch fabric, 1 yard of 39-inch lining, ¾ yard of 54-inch interlining.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Laryngitis.

THE larynx or voice box is frequently the site of inflammation. The tissues can become congested with blood, infected with bacteria and abused by overwork. Usually the first symptom is hoarseness. This means that the swelling has involved the vocal cords. Most cases of laryngitis result from an acute cold in which the infection has gradually gravitated downward until the structures of the throat and larynx are affected. Generally the acute swelling in this area subsides within a day or two. This is particularly true if the voice is used but little and if the condition is well managed.

There is not a particle of use attempting to treat inflammation of the larynx in the presence of throat and nose infection for the mere relief of the symptom of hoarseness. It is necessary to direct attention to the original cause, and as the mucous membrane of the nasal passages returns to normal so will the larynx.

Acute laryngitis in children is sometimes called croup. In this situation the child may be taken at night with hoarse, heavy breathing and complain of great difficulty in getting the breath. Sometimes the face is dusky in shade because the blood is supplied insufficiently with oxygen. The temperature is often elevated and frequently quick action is required to prevent disaster. Diphtheria attacks the larynx as well as the throat, and a case that presents the symptoms of croup must also be considered as possibly diphtheritic until it is shown that it is not. In severe cases it is necessary to open the windpipe (trachea) surgically.

For the general treatment of laryngitis hot baths involving the whole body, hot mustard foot baths, and hot lemonades are indicated. In swelling of the larynx or in croup the air of the room should be filled with steam. Special croup kettles are devised, and compound tincture of benzoin, camphor, or menthol may be added to the boiling water. An ice bag about the throat or cold compresses applied to the throat are sometimes of value. Gargles are useless because they can not reach the larynx.

If hoarseness persists for more than a few days in adults, or for more than a few hours in children, the condition calls for investigation by a physician.

Most cases of acute laryngitis of infectious origin are mild and subside soon after the nasal or throat irritation clears up. A few days of proper treatment and rest are all that is needed. Chronic laryngitis, however, as indicated by persistent hoarseness, must be managed by a competent throat specialist.

What Today Means

"Capricorn."

IF JANUARY 10 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m.

In your social contacts on this date it might be well to avoid any form of abruptness, if you wish to create a favorable impression. Married and engaged couples, as well as those eager to enter upon an affair d'amour, may engage in discussions where it will be decidedly wise not to let temper get the better of politeness.

If a woman and January 10 is your birthday, you have a heart so responsive to the troubles of others that you are frequently burdened with responsibilities you should not assume. This may be an eventful day for you in a very pleasant way. Your fortune may change for the better through a string of circumstances that may be brought about by something which occurred a long time ago.

If a man and January 10 is your natal day, you should be a marvelous student of human nature. Your depth of understanding will probably become a valuable asset in both your business and social contacts. Being versatile and talented, there should be a place for you on the stage or in the artist's studio. Educational work, legal practice, or journalism may have honors in store for one of your intellectual attainments.

Avocado Dish Is Decorative And Delicious

Stuffed Salad Is Made With Sweet Corn and Pineapple.

By Dorothea Duncan.

WHILE YOU are brushing up on your vocabulary don't forget that food words have a way of changing and becoming out of date, too. For example, the mere mention of alligator pears to your grocer may bring a cool rebuff, as he replies, "Why, yes, we have some very fine avocados today." The two terms, alligator pear and avocado have been used interchangeably, but now the title alligator pear is deservedly losing ground, and if you should wonder why, there is an explanation.

The avocado was originally a tropical fruit, native to Mexico, Central America and northern South America. The Aztecs were the first people to discover the fruit and used it abundantly as a source of food in their diet. The fruit is now widely produced in the West Indies, the Southern States, particularly Florida, and in California.

The tree itself is very much like a large spreading evergreen, but it bears leaves of oval shape and a brilliant green coloring. The tree bears fruit in abundance, and it hangs from the tree very much like pears. Avocados, as known in the markets, are of a deep, greenish yellow coloring, but they may be found in their original tropical setting in shades ranging from red and deep purple to brown and yellow.

Many Colloquial Names.

The avocado, no doubt, was first called a pear, because of its shape, which suggested to the Indian the sweet, succulent fruit of a true pear tree. The skin of the fruit may have had a rough appearance, but as known today it is smooth and clear and bears no resemblance to the rough, irregular skin of the alligator.

The avocado has many local and colloquial names, some of them self-explanatory, such as "midshipman's butter," "vegetable butter" and "butter pear." The term butter, of course, comes from the fact that the fruit contains 10 to 20 per cent of a rich, greenish oil. The natives of Central America, especially in Guatemala, where there is a scarcity of meat and fish, use the avocado as a main part of their diet. Here a good-sized avocado, four or five tortillas and a cup of coffee are considered an adequate meal.

Word Means "Lawyer."

The word avocado is Spanish, meaning "lawyer," but it bears no significance in the naming of the fruit. It is merely a phonetic substitute for the Aztec name for the fruit which was "ahuacatl." The title alligator pear then is misleading and has been more or less consigned to oblivion.

The avocado has gained great popularity, especially since its cultivation in the United States, and the price has become less prohibitive to the average budget. At first the avocado was considered in the terms of a salad, and gained wide popularity when served with grapefruit and orange slices accompanied by French dressing. After this fad had lost its newness, the housewife used her own ingenuity as to how the fruit could be served, and she was aided by suggestions offered by the planters and distributors of the fruit.

Avocados are good only when served at their best and then they are par excellence. The avocado is ready to serve when the flesh has softened so that the fruit yields quite easily to the gentle pressure of the full hand. The flesh has the best flavor when thoroughly softened, but before it is so soft that it has become at all discolored.

Here is an avocado salad that will create no end of favorable comment, because of the beauty with which it graces your table and the delightful way that it tickles the palate.

Stuffed Avocado Salad.

Scoop the flesh from half an avocado. Make a puree of the flesh seasoned with salt and a little lemon juice and mixed with sweet corn and pineapple. Scoop balls from the other half of the avocado. Fill the half shell with the puree and lay the balls around the edge. Garnish between the balls with some of the puree run through a decorating tube. Place a strip of red pimiento across the filled shell both lengthwise and crosswise and garnish with ripe olives. Serve the shell on a bed of crisp, chopped lettuce and garnish the plate with lemon slices and parsley.

Dorothea Duncan will be glad to answer your culinary problems. Write to her, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, in care of The Washington Post.

12. Repeal of the 1931 and 1933 amendments to the workmen's compensation act.

Responsibility "Mine," He Says.

The investigating committee asked by the new Governor would have authority to inquire into all expenses of the State. "The responsibility of this investigation is mine," Governor Nice said. "Assuming such responsibility, I feel justified in asking of you that I be vested with authority to name the members of the commission. Charged with this responsibility, it is proper that I should be clothed with authority to meet it."

Speaking of President Roosevelt, Gov. Nice said: "We are privileged to admire the fine passion for humanity which inspires the Chief Executive, without entire approval of the specific plans formulated by his advisers, sometimes with no greater experience than is to be had within the sheltered walls of the demic world. The insistent demands that the constitutional guarantees, within whose protection our system has been built, and our Nation has grown great, shall be undermined, in order that theorists may experiment at will with great business interests affecting millions of our people, excite our profound apprehension and alarm."

A drizzling rain provided typical inaugural weather, but failed to deter the enthusiatic crowds which trampled the State House lawns and pushed aimlessly through the corridors. Estimates of the throng ranged from 5,000 to 10,000. Republican strongholds in the lower Eastern Shore and the mountains of Western Maryland sent strong delegations to such a ceremony as they had not seen for two decades. Veteran attaches of the Legislature said it was the largest inaugural in their memory.

Two hours before the ceremony, the House and Senate met to canvass the votes for Governor. They found that Mr. Nice had been elected, but were not surprised. Then, in the House, Speaker Gorfine spent a fruitless 10 minutes trying to clear the galleries which were reserved for ticket holders. Unauthorized persons, arriving early, had taken the seats and held them throughout the festivities.

It was 11:45 when members of the House came into the Senate chamber, pushing through the crowd in the wake of a flying wedge of Baltimore policemen. They found Senator Sasscer almost hidden behind a bank of red roses on the rostrum. Members of the Court of Appeals, in their judicial robes, came in, also, behind a police wedge. Tension mounted as the crowds in the corridors began to cheer. Gov.-elect Nice and Gov. Ritchie were approaching.

Cheering broke out as they entered the Senate, behind the lusty policemen. Both sides could shout for the Governor, because both sides had a Governor there. Mrs. Nice, who had entered the chamber earlier, was there to see her husband's triumph.

Swears In State Secretary.

After the oath, applause broke out again as the two Governors went slowly through the crowds to the executive offices. As his first official act, Gov. Nice sent to the Senate the name of Thomas L. Dawson, of Rockville, Md., as his secretary of state. As his last official act, Secretary Winebrenner carried to the upper house the nomination of his successor.

The Senate went into executive session and the Democratic floor leader proposed the assent to the nomination. It was unanimous, and the Senate recessed for the joint session with the House.

Gov. Nice swore in Mr. Dawson, and again pushed his way through the crowds to the House chamber. While floodlights glared into his face, he proposed his remedies for some of the ills of the State. Later he went to the west portico of the Statehouse to view the 14-minute parade. Gov. Ritchie left at the same time and went to Baltimore, where he was to be guest of honor at a luncheon given by his supporters.

The parade over, Gov. Nice and Mrs. Nice retired to the old Senate chamber to hold a reception. Republicans filed by him almost at the rate of 60 to the minute, offering their congratulations. Republicans cheered in the basement, Republicans lounged in the corridors.

The House and Senate adjourned until January 16.

With a borrowed fountain pen, Gov. Nice signed his oath of office, left, in the presence of Chief Judge Bond. Following the inaugural ceremonies, Gov. and Mrs. Nice entertained at a reception for the thousands of Marylanders who had journeyed to Annapolis for the inauguration. Mrs. Nice and the Governor are seen shaking hands with some of their guests, including, left to right, Rose Carroll, Mary Allen Holland and Mrs. Alexander Bowdle, who has little Jean Marie Bowdle in her arms.

Sells Wrist Watch Through Post Ad

There is an old Grecian proverb that has come down through the ages which contains a homely philosophy for all Classified Advertisers. It is "MULTITUDES BUY—WHERE MULTITUDES ABIDE." Smart business men closely adhere to this philosophy. Busy locations, by which the public passes at all hours of the day, bring the biggest rents—and are always in demand.

You can reach a reader audience of over 85,000 daily by placing your ad in Post Classified columns. Not at a time when they are hustling and bustling through traffic but when they are comfortably located in their homes.

Take the interesting story of Mr. A. L. Schiller, proprietor of The Pawnbrokers Exchange, 444 Ninth street, northwest. Mr. Schiller has used The Post Classified Ads for the past three years offering to BUY miscellaneous articles.

Last month a representative of the Classified department prevailed upon Mr. Schiller to try these columns to SELL merchandise. Reluctant, at first, to depart from his usual routine, he ran a three-line ad offering a lady's wrist watch for $47.50. The very day the ad appeared, he sold it to a Post reader. Now let's quote Mr. Schiller, "As a direct result of the pulling power of Post Classified Ads we have made a New Year's resolution—to renew our contract with The Post and to increase our lineage as our business permits."

$783,049 State Deficit Changed Into Surplus

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 9 (AP).—A $783,049.02 deficit in the operating surplus of the State on December 1 was changed to a surplus of $132,993.70 at the end of the month, it was shown today by the balance of the State comptroller's office.

At the beginning of the month there was a $1,061,498.68 deficit in the general funds and a $278,449.66 credit in special funds, making the total $783,049.02 deficit.

During the month the State received revenue totaling $3,843,886.26 and made disbursements and transfers of $2,921,212.04. On December 31 there was a $902,365.41 deficit in the general fund account and a $1,035,359.11 credit in the special fund account, giving the operating surplus of $132,993.70.

The general trend, which is expected to produce a $2,229,000 deficit by September 30 next, is shown by the gradual reduction of the operating surplus in the three-month period ended December 31. On October 1 the operating surplus was $156,877.97. This had declined to $132,993.70 at the end of the year.

The State ended the calendar year with $2,725,269.75, due in taxes from the tax collectors of Baltimore City and the 23 counties and from corporations. Of this amount, $1,387,252.20 was due from 1934 taxes, the balance being distributed over previous years.

The State ended the year with $5,900,387.70 in available cash in the treasury, and with accounts receivable of $2,682,594.49.

Carson Will Seek To Succeed Peery In '37, Say Friends

Richmond, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—William E. Carson, of Riverton, who recently retired as chairman of the State commission on conservation and development, will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor in 1937, according to his close friends.

Mr. Carson is reported to have confided in several of his friends following the dinner recently given in his honor at Front Royal that he will make the race when the time arrives. He is planning, these friends declare, to conduct a quiet "build-up" campaign during the next two years and then formally announce his candidacy about the end of 1936.

When he was asked today about these reports Mr. Carson said:

"Bunk, just bunk. That's all."

Should Mr. Carson at the proper time decide to enter the race, there would be a fine three-cornered contest in prospect. Already the friends of J. Sinclair Brown, of Salem, speaker of the House of Delegates, are urging him to become a candidate for Governor, and the friends of James H. Price, of Richmond, lieutenant governor, are equally vigorous in insisting that Mr. Price make the race.

Asylum Fugitive Taken in Virginia

Farley Explanation On Stamps Scouted

'Mistake' Story Called 'Masterpiece of Evasion.'

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 9 (AP).—Norfolk philatelists are not satisfied with Postmaster General James A. Farley's explanation that imperforate sheets of stamps were given to his friends "by mistake," the executive committee of the Norfolk Philatelic society announced today.

A special meeting was held last night to consider the Postmaster General's answer to a recent criticism of him for allegedly allowing his friends to have the stamps which have a high rarity value because they did not pass under the perforating machine and are therefore imperfect.

The statement issued today by Leon Wahrman, secretary of the society, called Mr. Farley's statement "a masterpiece of evasion" and asserted he had made no mention of his children being among those receiving "these $20,000 favors." It demanded that the sheets of stamps either be recalled by the Government or that the same varieties be issued for sale to the general public in identical form.

Upturn Cited By Woodrum In House Tilt

Engages in Clash With Eaton, Bitter Critic of Administration.

Two party stalwarts—Representative Eaton (Republican), New Jersey, and Representative Woodrum (Democrat), Virginia—clashed on the floor of the House yesterday over Administration policy, the Associated Press reported.

The debate was precipitated by an extemporaneous speech by Eaton attacking what he termed vagueness in the Presidential message of last Friday.

Eaton challenged the ability of any person or administration to establish a "new order" and asserted his belief the American people would continue to travel along "fundamental, normal lines."

Wants Leaders to Act.

He asserted recovery would never be accomplished until the business, labor, financial and political leaders of this country were called together and brought to an understanding of fundamental principles and a joint solution evolved.

Woodrum challenged the statement people were losing faith in the President and said such was certainly not shown in the last election. He declared the people of the country looked to President Roosevelt and not to Congress, whether Democratic or Republican, as the man to lead them out of the depression.

Eaton asked Woodrum if he meant that the legislative body could be considered unnecessary or as a mere "rubber stamp" for the President.

Sees Emergency Ended.

Woodrum replied: "Certainly not and if I did I would return to my law practice in Roanoke and starve to death with the rest of the lawyers. I believe that since the emergency has passed that all of us who have always had personal opinions will be able to express them more and more. Under the stress of emergency we necessarily had to accept the strong leadership of the President."

Eaton contested the statement the depression had passed and cited unemployment, public debt and other evidences of distress.

Woodrum said, "The gentleman from New Jersey has missed the entire conception of the New Deal and the 'new order.' It is for those to the left, those to the right and those in the middle."

Senate's Dignity Crumbles Before Inaugural Throng

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 9.—The dignity of the Maryland Senate tottered and fell before the enthusiasm of the crowds watching the inaugural, who cheered and shouted without restraint. President Sasscer broke one gavel in pounding for order.

One enthusiast pushed his way through the crowds gloating over the departure of Ritchie. "The Big Shot's gone, boys," he repeated continuously.

Nice campaign buttons 4 inches in diameter appeared on some of the more earnest Republicans.

The banks of red roses in the Senate chamber were denuded of all their blossoms five minutes after the oath-taking. The blooms were carried off as souvenirs.

Good morning! Schloss Brothers clothing reduced! Suits, topcoats and overcoats of a quality standard that has greatly increased our popularity in Washington. Now at January Clearance prices. And everybody knows that clothing prices are due for a rise.

A Star of Great Promise Makes Debut in Commonplace Film at Loew's Columbia

Miss Christians Scores in Trite Mother Story

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

"A WICKED WOMAN." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the novel by Anne Austin, adapted to the screen by Florence Ryerson and Zelda Sears, starring Mady Christians, with Charles Bickford, Jean Parker, Betty Furness, William Henry, Jackie Searle, Paul Harvey, Zelda Sears, Sterling Holloway and T. DeWitt Jennings. Directed by Charles Brabin. Reviewed Tuesday afternoon.

By Nelson B. Bell.

In Mady Christians the cinema has a potential star capable of taking her place among the foremost of the contemporary emotional actresses who find it possible, now and again, to surrender to the livelier urge of comedy.

This was conclusively demonstrated on the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater yesterday when Miss Christians, who made her first screen appearance in 1933, emerged triumphant over material far less noteworthy than her distinguished utilization of it.

The medium of her stellar introduction to Washington audiences was a threadbare and trite film play of mother love, sacrifice and self-abnegation bearing the title of "A Wicked Woman," as able a bit of faulty titling as has come along since "One Night of Love," which never did make sense.

"A Wicked Woman" is the story of a browbeaten wife and mother who slays her husband in self-defense and for the protection of her children, removes the brood far from the scene of the crime and builds a reputation, a home and a competency that place her among nature's noblewomen. But the taint always is upon her conscience, even if not known or suspected by the outside world.

Mother Faces Stern Task.

Her children grow to adolescence, safeguarded from all the usual pitfalls that await the intrepid tread of confident youth. The task is not an easy one for the mother, even after she has enlisted the interest of Pat Naylor, the small-town newspaper editor who takes her oldest son under his wing and salvages him from a nasty predicament.

Much the same sort of travail has been made the subject of innumerable other celluloid charades —which is not especially helpful to Miss Christians. There is about her impersonation of the mother, however, that which sets it distinctly apart from the common or garden variety of maternal tear-jerker—a feeling, a naturalness, an obvious sincerity that spring only from deep wells of sensitiveness and interpretative power.

All of these things Miss Christians seems to possess in abundance.

In appearance, this new star, without any quality of imitativeness in anything she does, at one time or another, suggests a slightly humanized Ruth Chatterton, a characteristically wistful Mary Pickford or an authoritative and commanding Kathlyn Williams—if there is a man still alive who remembers the better performances of that estimable actress, who, estimable or not, was by no means Miss Christians' equal either in versatility or power.

The courtroom scene in which Naomi Trice returns to the surroundings of her justifiable homicide, to stand trial in expiation of a long period of freedom from prosecution, is an admirable and a moving accomplishment.

Notable Supporting Cast.

A supporting cast of unusual strength has been assembled to afford Miss Christians the benefit of splendid contributory portrayals. Charles Bickford, as Saylor, and Jackie Searle, as Curtis Trice as a child, here emerge from the unpleasant sort of thing in which they customarily are engaged to assume roles of sympathetic interest and warmth. Jean Parker, Betty Furness, William Henry and Robert Taylor are among those who do much to make the junior characters perhaps the most vibrant and most definitely engaging in the play. Paul Harvey, as the victim of the wifely bullet; T. DeWitt Jennings, as a sheriff who never got this man because the man's wife beat him to it; Zelda Sears, one of the adaptors of the novel to the screen, in a small part, and Sterling Holloway account for the maturer roles in something more than adequate fashion.

One of Paramount's "Screen Variety" reels, reassembling antiquated features of the newsreels of an earlier day; Harry Gribbon and George Shelton in a Christie comedy, "Rural Romeos;" a new issue of the newsreel and the habitual house features are the supplementaries of a bill that will be continued only through tomorrow night.

Miss Christians deserves a more representative first run to signalize the advent of a competent and well-equipped new star to the screen.

So, much to our surprise, and pleasure, comes the following by one of Mr. Farley's gray-clad minions:

"Dear Mr. Bell: Mr. Gwenn is so appreciative of your comment about him that he has written me on the subject. He says that he doesn't understand the etiquette to be followed 'out here' regarding one's expression of appreciation toward a critic who has written favorably about an actor. He suggested, therefore, that I let you know. I hope 'Laburnum Grove' gets over here (New York) as well as it did in Washington. Sincerely,

(Signed)" C. P. GRENEKER."

Mr. Gwenn would, of course, be the Edmund Gwenn who did such an uncommonly fine job in the role of George Radfern in J. B. Priestley's "Laburnum Grove," at the National last week; Mr. Greneker, the Poohbah of the Shubert offices in New York, the American production of "Laburnum Grove" having been jointly sponsored by Lee Shubert and Gilbert Miller. The only reason Mr. Gwenn felt himself compelled to take so round-about a way of communicating with me was that a slightly serious and completely debilitating dental infection unhappily prevented my calling upon him during his brief stay in the Capital. I, too, hope for the best in the matter of "Laburnum Grove's" Broadway reception. The hope, as a matter of fact, amounts practically to a conviction—so long as Mr. Gwenn remains in the leading role.

The Erstwhile "Miss Howard."

Mary Rogers, of the cast of "On to Fortune," the new "comedy of manners" that comes into the National Theater next week, appeared in one Hollywood picture with her father, Will Rogers, and then decided she wanted a Broadway stage career.

Pursuant to this end, she toured Canada last spring in "Caprice" and spent last summer at the noted summer resort, Skowhegan, Me., where she played a variety of ingenue roles with the resident company which operates there each year. Included in her assignments were the bundling heroine role in "The Pursuit of Happiness," by Lawrence Langner and Armina Marshall, the authors of "On to Fortune."

Made Debut With Dad.

It will be recalled that Miss Rogers made her screen debut under the professional name of "Mary Howard," having secured her engagement incognito on the Fox lot without any influence being brought by her reasonably influential dad.

Mrs. Will Rogers, her mother, is understood still to be averse to any personal publicity on behalf of her daughter until she has earned it by notable stage achievement. Even this paragraph, I am given to believe, will do nothing whatever to popularize this column with the wife of the cowboy comedian.

I understand, however, that Harry Essex, missionarying here for "On to Fortune," and Anne Grosvenor Ayres, dittoing from New York, do not mind!

Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians, plus something of a revue, tonight add the luster of their accomplishments to the already illustrious bill being presented at Loew's Fox Theater this week, appearing at 6:05 and 8:40 p. m., with N. T. G.'s Paradise Cafe Revue holding down the stage spots on the bill this afternoon at 12:15 and 3:10. The same general arrangement will be in effect tomorrow, but the time schedules will be slightly altered for good and sufficient reasons, although I don't know what they are! Consult the "Film Time Tables" and play safe.

Character Actors Flourish.

Two of the stage's widely acclaimed character actors seem to be going places in the fillums. From that busy brunette bureaucrat of ballyhoo, Helen Hoerle, comes what may be described as "1776 Broadway broadcasts" to the effect that Gene Lockhart's role in "Captain Hurricane," which he is now making with James Barton (his first vehicle) and Henry Travers is very different from the parts he played in his first two pictures, "By Your Leave" and "I've Been Around," both of which have been released. In the new film Lockhart plays an old Cape Cod sea captain, afraid of nothing but the feminine sex.

Lockhart has been accepted as one of the most effective and pleasant character comedians to enter film ranks in some time, revealing a distinct screen personality, just as he was one of the outstanding character actors of the spoken stage.

History Revision Note.

You may have your own preconceived notions as to who it was that originally "laid out" the District of Columbia, but on the evidence of the past few days and nights you will have to admit that the gentleman's real name must have been Mj. Long Fog!

Gets a Dixie Role at Last!

Gail Patrick was born in Alabama, which any one will admit is below the Mason-Dixon line, and was signed by Paramount as a contract player some two years ago. Only now, however, has she finally been cast in the part of a Southern girl. Now for the first time she gets a chance to play a Dixie belle in "Mississippi," about ready for release by Paramount. In this subject she rivals Joan Bennett for the affections of Bing Crosby—which ought to make it a pretty close race!

Dr. R. W. Miner Tells of Lure Of the Bahamas

Motion Pictures Add Interest to Washington Post Series.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

The Bahamas, islands of legend and romance, were visited in fancy last night by hundreds of Washingtonians who heard Dr. Roy Waldo Miner deliver The Post Travel Lecture on "The Bahama Islands." Dr. Miner, who is curator of lower invertebrates of the American Museum of Natural History, is an authority on these islands, and has spent years of study there.

This lecture was beautifully illustrated with colored slides and motion pictures showing not only the lovely scenery of these famous islands, but also picturing the grandeur of the marine gardens below the sea. Motion pictures revealed the methods used by scientists who, studying the coral formations in the crystal clear waters, descend to the sea floor in special diving suits.

Among those who heard the lecture last evening was Stanley Eaton Gunnison, of New York, American representative of the Nassau Trade Development Board, who described Dr. Miner's lecture as one of the best ever given telling of the beauty of the Bahamas group.

Last night's lecture was the first to be given after the holidays. The next lecture, on Peru, Ecuador and other South American countries, will be given next Tuesday evening at the Masonic auditorium, Thirteenth street and New York avenue.

Caught in Mud, Man Is Rescued

Oysterman, 68, Freed After Two Hours as Creek Waters Rise.

Chestertown, Md., Jan. 9 (AP).—Martin Taylor, 68, too weak to shout for help, was rescued today from the mud of Fork Creek, a tributary of Chester River, 10 miles south of here as the tide rose to above his neck.

Taylor's head was seen above the water, about 25 yards from shore, by Albert White and his son, George. They worked more than an hour before they freed the stricken man.

"Oh, God, this is a funny place," the rescuers heard Taylor mutter as they reached his side in a rowboat. The man said he had been in the water two hours, but was too weak to explain how he got there. He was placed under the care of a physician.

The Whites were walking along the shore of the farm owned by Mrs. William Maxwell when they saw Taylor's head. He was muttering incoherently but was not able to shout. They believed Taylor had been wading near the shore, looking for oysters, when he was caught in the mud.

The Whites said the tide was rising as they pushed out a rowboat and paddled toward the man, who was standing upright in the water. The water had nearly reached his mouth by the time they reached him.

Committees Soon to Give Report on Replacing Tucker Hall.

Lexington, Va., Jan. 9 (AP).—Reports of committees working for a new law building to replace the burned Tucker Hall at Washington and Lee University are to be made to the university trustees within the next ten days.

The annual meeting of the trustees is usually held in conjunction with the founders' day program on January 19, Lee's birthday, but there is a possibility the board will meet prior to that date this year to consider reports on replacing Tucker Hall.

Dr. Edwin Mims, head of the English department of Vanderbilt University, will deliver the founders' day address January 19, Dr. Francis P. Gaines, president of Washington and Lee, announced today.

Washington and Lee students get a holiday founders' day, but they are required to attend the 11 o'clock assembly, when Dr. Mims will speak.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywood, Jan. 9.

EVERY ONE during the last ten days has been busy selecting the ten best pictures.

In reading over the comments of the exhibitors—the men who pay and play them—in the Motion Picture Herald, I decided to see what they had to say about some of the best.

The top flicker of the year from all comments is "It Happened One Night." I have read the "What the Picture Did for Me" department weekly and have yet to read a dissenting vote. The latest nice remark is from Exhibitor Ross, jr., of St. George, S. C. He writes: "Nothing can be added to what other exhibitors have said about this picture. It is one swell piece of entertainment."

"One Night of Love" is well liked by the theater managers themselves, but they are disappointed in the business. Quoting P. G. Held, of Griswold, Iowa: "Grace Moore is a wonderful singer, but as a small town picture it was the bunk. It fell flat at the box office. We lost money on this."

• • • •

"The House of Rothschild" was well received and did good business in the majority of small town cinema palaces, but it didn't create the sensation that it did in the big town cinema palaces. However, it is still touring, and in some instances playing return engagements. Another on the best list which is receiving the same reception accorded "It Happened One Night" is "The Thin Man." Just one of the many is H. M. Johnson, of Avon Park, Fla., who writes: "Picture created exceptionally fine comment. Pleased 100 per cent."

Another example of the critics and the box office agreeing.

• • • •

By far the best musical of the season was "The Gay Divorcee." This is getting nothing but raves. Bert Silver, of Greenville, Mich., is only one of the many exhibitors who writes blurbs such as this: "This is 100 per cent entertainment. We have played none better . . . I can't tell you how big it is, but I have seen none bigger or better. Gave splendid satisfaction to all."

"The Barretts of Wimpole Street" in the majority of small towns is doing business, but it must be properly handled and exploited. As Exhibitor Johnson says: "This picture if sold right will get the money. Don't go after the Saturday night crowd with this one. Get the people that don't go often, and let them know about the picture, and they will come to see it. Keep the uneducated away if possible, as they will go out and knock the picture . . ." Which should give you an idea of the difficulties a fine picture experiences after it leaves the smart cities.

• • • •

"Viva Villa" was liked by the exhibitors and the male audiences, but as a rule the ladies didn't go for it. Therefore, it didn't do as big a business as it rated, for it is generally the lady who tells the gent with her what flicker to see. Here is the comment of Exhibitors Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Racine, of Burns, Oreg., who give you the mister and missus view of it: "A great production . . . All of the men liked it and thought it was the best show ever. Women as a rule didn't like it. Thought it was too brutal . . . Many women stayed away during the showing, while the men came, so business wasn't as good as it should have been."

• • • •

These are the pictures which were on the majority of lists, but after these selections the critics varied as much as the handicappers who pick the winners of horse races. Some of the other flickers nominated included "Catherine the Great," "The Count of Monte Cristo," "The Lost Patrol" and "No Greater Glory." Every selector had a special favorite, and there is no need to relate how these specials failed at the box-office windows. There were several flickers listed as box-office champions which didn't make any critics' list. A Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor, Bing Crosby or Joan Crawford flicker, to state a few. These are the more obvious examples where critics and box office disagree.

It is much easier to name the ten worst pictures of the season than it is to name the ten best. Any picker could name "Down to Their Last Yacht" and complete the task.

• • • •

The exhibitors and the critics would agree on this one. B. J. Vanderby, of Doland, S. Dak., writes: "Fooey. Good acting on the part of the actors, but it must have had 15 or 20 writers and directors, as just a few men could not have made that many mistakes. I would suggest that they all take up plumbing—my apologies to the plumbers—and my congratulations to the artists who made the paper on it. I felt like standing in the lobby as they came out and saying, 'Aha, we fooled you.'"

And now that every one has compiled a list of the ten best, just to continue the game, how about a list of the ten best pickers of the people who pick the ten best?

Children's Aid Gives Up Claim To Liquor Fees

Decision Is Revealed at Annual Meeting of Frederick Group.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—Decision of the board of managers to reliquish the orgasization's claim to beer and liquor license fees was announced by Charles McC. Mathias, president, at the annual meeting and election of officers of the Frederick County Branch of the Maryland Children's Aid Society, here.

Mathias stated that relinquishing the liquor and beer fees allotted to it by an act of the special session of the General Assembly in 1933, the managers believed the use of money from this source should be discontinued and arrangements had been made with the county commissioners so the liquor license fees will go to the county instead of the Children's Aid Society.

The following officers were elected:

President, Mr. Mathias; vice presidents, the Rev. Dr. Charles E. Wehler, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Richard S. J. Dutrow; secretary, Mrs. Edgar H. McBride; assistant, Mrs. George F. Von Eiff, and treasurer, Virgil W. Doub.

The following comprise the board of managers; Chief Judge Hammond Urner, Judge Arthur D. Willard, the county commissioners, A. H. Derr, president; Mayor Lloyd C. Culler, the board of aldermen; D. Coach Harmony's Team in Debut Tomorrow Against V. M. I.

McAboy, McCaw, Webb Again Available; Stars in Last Campaign.

By Bill McCormick.

MARYLAND UNIVERSITY boxers again this year will play the role of dark horses—or dark Terrapins if you prefer—in the Southern Conference.

Last year Coach Harmony, without the material that is his this season, took only four of his leather pushers to the conference tournament and the four very quietly and efficiently battled Maryland into runner-up position for the championship.

Three of the four who lifted the Old Liners into the limelight—Lyman McAboy, Stewart McCaw and Walter Webb—are back in the ranks this year. Al Farrell, who stole the show in a rousing battle to reach the finals, will be among the missing—at least when the Terps make their initial start against V. M. I. tomorrow night. Harold Burns, last year's welterweight, is out for the time being with an injured knee.

Jimmy Young, originally assigned to the flyweight berth, forgot to duck in training and is off the squad with a cracked nose which may keep him on the shelf all winter. His position will be held down by Joe Fimiani, a youngster who will receive his baptism of varsity leather this year.

Fimiani is fast and a good puncher, but woefully lacking in experience.

Waller Bigger, Better.

Bill Waller, a junior from Silver Spring, who fought as a flyweight last year, is back in the 125-pound position this year, bigger and better than ever. Sheer ruggedness alone enabled Bill to win four out of his six dual meet starts last season. This season he has bolstered his Gibraltar-like qualities with a more sound knowledge of fisticuffing.

Ivan Nedomatsky, the Maryland lightweight, hails from Catonsville, Md., and comes by his fighting ability naturally. His brother performs in the professional ring as Jimmy Jones, welterweight champion of Baltimore, and is the same Jimmy Jones who so soundly spanked Bob Bowry at the Auditorium Tuesday night.

Ivan, a sophomore last year, boxed for one of the numerous amateur clubs which have been feeding grist into the professional ring so successfully of late. A whirlwind hooker of the Dempsey type, many are of the opinion that Nedomatsky will rule supreme in the conference lightweight circles.

Walter Webb, last season's lightweight, has graduated into the 145-pound division this year. An exceptionally fast boxer as a lightweight, the Vienna, Md., lad seems to have lost none of his dazzling speed at the heavier weight. As a 135-pounder, he won three out of four bouts.

McAboy Combination.

A combination Pete Sarron, Maxie Baer and Battling Bozo will hold down the 155-pound berth for the Terrapins. Lyman McAboy by name, the Old Liners' junior middleweight pinwheels his punches as does Sarron, laughs his way out of difficulties as does Baer and is just about as naturally funny in the ring as is Bozo.

A senior from Washington, McAboy has cavorted on the Terrapin squad for two years, much to the delight of collegiate clout addicts. Last year he battled his way to the finals of the conference tournament, but was forced to forfeit his big moment because of a cut eye. In duel meets last season he was defeated only once—on a hairline decision at West Point.

Tebell Is Cool To Virginia Grid Job

Alumni, However, Likely to Favor Him at Meeting Saturday.

WHILE delegates to the general alumni meeting of the University of Virginia prepared for a march on Charlottesville Saturday, when they will discuss the athletic situation, Gus Tebell, head football coach, has let it be known that he is not particularly anxious to retain that post.

But Tebell's tepid attitude toward football, rendered more acute by what he considers an inadequate salary, has not affected the alumni's esteem for him. The prevailing belief is that poor material, not lack of proper coaching, was responsible for Virginia's performance last autumn.

Alumni to Suggest.

The alumni will make suggestions concerning athletics and probably will recommend a man for the football coaching berth, and the position is believed to be Tebell's if he wants it. Genial Gus, however, has hinted that he would like to carry on as basket ball and baseball coach with a new man at the helm of the grid squad.

Possibly the only thing that would induce Tebell to alter his stand would be a suitable increase in salary. Football meant only an additional thousand dollars per year to him, and he does not think that sum adequately justifies his labor or worry with the squad.

Meanwhile, the Washington Alumni Chapter is sending a committee to Charlottesville to broach a plan whereby both students and alumni will have an active part in shaping the school's athletic policy. The chapter believes both should have more voice in the matter than is now vested in them.

By Paul Gallico.

ROME, Jan. 3 (Via Mail).—The last word in stadium construction was spoken many, many years ago. It isn't the Yale Bowl, or Palmer Stadium, or Olympic Stadium in Los Angeles, but an arena, 200 hundred feet in height with an external circumference of 1,900 feet.

It was begun 72 years after the birth of Christ. It was called the Flavian Amphitheater, and later the Colosseum. It held over 88,000 people. It had 80 numbered portals. It could be emptied in ten minutes. Built a little less than 1,900 years ago, it lacked no single comfort or convenience of a modern football stadium or athletic arena, and it had a few that we don't have.

One of them makes me feel a little ashamed for the backwardness of the moderns. When it rains during a football game at the Yale Bowl, or the Harvard Stadium, or any of our big sport saucers, from 60,000 to 90,000 people get soaked. The Romans sat warm, tight and dry.

Around the topmost rim of the colosseum ran a wooden platform on which perched the sailors of the fleet. When the sun grew too hot, or rain threatened, they unfurled a gigantic canvas and silk awning that covered the whole of the tremendous amphitheater, leaving only a hole in the center. The Romans considered it sucker stuff to sit out in the rain.

Underneath the flooring of the arena of the colosseum, which was of wood and was supported by stone

N. C. State Faces Duke at Boxing

Green Team Led by Fabri, Lone Veteran.

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 8 (Spl.).—The Carolina State College varsity boxing team will open its 1935 schedule Saturday night against South Carolina at Columbia.

Only one member of the State team that met South Carolina last year will return to Columbia Saturday. He is Jack Fabri, 155-pound captain of the 1935 squad. Coach Peele Johnson will use Joe Ryneska, star 165-pounder of the 1934 freshman team, against Dave Stoddard, the Gamecock ace.

Should Ryneska not fight, Alex Regdon, outstanding puncher on the team, will be moved down to the middleweight division from the 175-pound class, leaving the State's light heavyweight berth in the possession of Louie Marks, a newcomer.

State's other classes probably will be filled by Rafael Mendez, 115 pounds; Fred Walsh, 125 pounds; Glenn Penland, 135 pounds; Seaman Hudson, 145 pounds and Nellis Johnson, heavyweight.

Malloy to Quit Sports Posts At College

Mt. St. Mary's Coach Will Devote Full Time to Job as Steward.

EMMITSBURG, Md., Jan. 9 (AP).—Arthur H. Malloy, athletic director and coach at Mt. St. Mary's College since 1925, will retire from his athletic positions next June to devote his entire time to his duties as steward of the college.

Malloy's resignation was disclosed today in official circles here, but authorities at the college declined to make any statement. The college board will meet in the near future to select a successor to Malloy.

Last fall Malloy was appointed steward of the college in the course of a series of changes made in the personnel of the institution. Because of these duties, he was not able to devote all his time to the football team, which had an unsuccessful season.

Continues With Quintet.

He will continue to coach the basket ball team for the remainder of the winter and to handle the baseball squad in the spring. A new coach is to be named before the start of the football season next fall.

Malloy is planning to remain at Mt. St. Mary's after June. He will continue as steward, developing the system which he inaugurated last September.

Jackson Signs Giant Contract

Team Captain Held Likely to Play 3d Base.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—Coincident with today's arrival of Travis (Stoney) Jackson's signed contract, Secretary Jim Tierney announced that the New York Giants' captain and erstwhile shortstop will play regularly at third base in the revised 1935 infield.

It had been assumed the National League's former ace shortstop would occupy the Giants' hot corner this season, since the acquisition of Dick Bartell from the Phillies for the short field, unless Manager Bill Terry happened to put through a good deal that would shift the veteran Jackson to other pastures. Before the Bartell deal, Terry had been trying to get Joe Stripp of Brooklyn for third base.

Today's announcement spiked any remaining rumors that Stoney was still on the block and gave opportunity to New York baseball writers to conjecture what kind of a race Jackson may give Joe Stripp or Pinkey Whitney, of the Braves, for the league's third-basing honors, despite his 31 years and his trick knee.

Although Stoney never held down the third sack regularly, he is no stranger at that position. Substituting at third for appendicitis-stricken Johnny Vergez in the 1933 world series, Travis performed heroically. And when Vergez slumped in the 1934 campaign, Jackson again shifted from short to third in the campaign's closing stages. Blondy Ryan filled in at short.

Pete Kelly Is Signed.

Midwest Congressmen Seek Service Duel for Chicago.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 9 (U.P.).—Harvard, after signing Richard C. (Chick) Harlow, of Western Maryland, as its first nongraduate head coach, has "gone service" in its football schedule, listing home games with Navy as well as Army for 1936.

The schedule for the season after next, announced today, calls for games with Army on October 17 and Navy on November 14. Also on the 1936 schedule are games with Amherst, October 3; Brown, October 10; Dartmouth, October 24; Princeton, October 31; Virginia, November 7, and Yale at New Haven, November 21. Springfield, Holy Cross and New Hampshire, to be played next season, are dropped.

Harvard has been playing Army, in their recent series, since 1928, but the game with Navy, scheduled on a one-year basis, will be the first since 1908, when the teams played a 6-6 tie at Annapolis.

Mid-West Starts Drive For Army-Navy Game

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—A concerted drive is on to bring the 1935 Army-Navy game to Soldier Field, Chicago, the Tribune said tonight. Most of the Senators and Representatives who represent Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan are behind the drive, the newspaper said.

The two service elevens played at Soldier Feild in 1926 and rewarded the crowd of more than 110,000 spectators with one of football's greatest games, a 21-to-21 tie. All games before and since then have been played in New York or Philadelphia.

Campbell Has New Bluebird

Sir Malcolm Hopes to Go 300 Miles Per Hour.

Broklands, England, Jan. 9 (AP). A great new squat bluebird, which Sir Malcolm Campbell hopes to send singing down the sand at Daytona Beach, Fla., at more than 300 miles per hour a little over a month hence, emerged from its cocoon today.

Product of 18 months of unceasing research and labor, the famous racing monster presenter a vastly altered appearance and surprised even those closest to its equally famous pilot.

Completely redesigned, from its broad snout to the tip of its tail fin over 28 feet away, the glistening new juggernaut now is so flattened out it looks almost like a bobsled on wheels.

Sir Malcolm, who bustled about for more than an hour in the better cold posing for photographs and explaining various features, seemed prouder of this shutted than anything else.

"When I close it at top speed I should get 15 more miles per hour," he said.

Deficit of Cubs Is $600,000 In 3 Years

'Gold Mine' Revealed to Be Financial Flop by Owner of Club.

CHICAGO, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Chicago Cubs, thought to be a tremendous money maker, have been a financial flop for the last three years.

Philip K. Wrigley, 40-year-old president, revealed today that the club lost $600,000 in that period. The loss for 1934 was around $200,000.

Said young Wrigley:

"It seems to be the general impression, even among National League owners, that the Cubs are a 'gold mine.' One look at our books, showing what we have paid out, and what we have received, would quickly cause a revision of that opinion."

Three Reasons Cited.

There are three major reasons for the huge deficit, Wrigley explained. These are: Falling off in attendance, generous salaries to the players and a tremendous cash expenditure for the purchase of stars, some of whom failed to click.

"No club owner, no matter how much money he has, can continue to lose money at such a rate. My job, as president of the team and director of its policies, will be to restore the Cubs to a paying proposition."

Asked if the 1935 pay roll of the club would be lower than last year, Wrigley replied:

"Not much. It will be better balanced, however. Our pay roll can not be much lower for us to maintain a club that we believe has a good chance to win the National League championship this year."

Some Salaries Slashed.

In balancing the pay roll of the team, Owner Wrigley indicated that some of the stars, who failed last season, would find their salaries slightly cut, while the deserving youngsters and veterans would be given boosts.

Wrigley pointed out that the Cubs lost about $50,000 less last year than in 1933. The 1934 loss included the purchase of high priced players. These included Chuck Klein, purchased from the Phillies for a reported $75,000; Big Bill Lee, a pitcher, who cost $30,000; Tuck Stainback, Roy Joiner and others. Added to this was the $22,000 salary paid Klein last season and $19,000 for Babe Herman.

Wrigley said the Cubs had lost more money than any major league team in the last three years.

"I am in the game for the sport of it," Wrigley added, "whether the club makes money or not, but it is essential that the club break nearly even or show a little profit."

Charity Gets $35,000.

San Francisco, Jan. 9 (AP).—The San Francisco unit of the Shriner's Hospital for crippled children will receive more than $35,000 net profit from the tenth annual East-West all star football game here New Year's, William M. Coffman, managing director of the event, announced today.

Close Battle Is Waged By Foes

Veteran Wins, 6-4, 7-5, but Only After Stern Contest.

Customers Cheer Star Shots; Loser Ahead in Second Set.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, New York, Jan. 9 (U.P.).—Bill Tilden spoiled George Martin Lott's professional tennis debut here tonight, when he defeated the Chicagoan, 6—4, 7—5.

Lott was beaten, but far from disgraced. Playing before a critical audience of nearly 16,000, and on a surface and under lights to which he was unaccustomed, he forced the long-legged old master to his finest tenis. Throughout the tennis was of the fastest, keenest sort, and both men executed shots which brought resounding cheers from the customers.

Lott reached his peak in the middle of the second set when, with a net attack that saw volley placement after volley placement cascade off his racquet, he took a lead of 5—4 in games, and led 15—40 on Tilden's service in the all-important tenth game. But Tilden was not dropping a set tonight. He beat off the first set point with a service ace that scorched the canvas and passed Lott before he could even raise his racquet. He took care of the second with a backhand passing shot, made on the dead run.

Lott Displays Temper.

This second effort was greeted with a "thattaboy Bill" from a gallery seat holder and Lott, peeved, picked up a ball and lobbed it swiftly toward Tilden's supporter.

With the games evened at 5-all, Tilden lifted his play to its peak, and swept the final two games with the loss of but a point.

The first set was strictly a duel between Tilden's backcourt game and Lott's brilliancy up close. The Chicagoan followed nearly every ball to the net, and for the first six games this strategy enabled him to stay on equal terms.

Tilden won the set in the seventh game when he broke through with two magnificent backhands to lead, 4-3. He then held his own delivery to move to 5-3. Lott staved off the inevitable by winning the ninth, taking the game with two perfect drop shots that caught Tilden flat-footed.

Tilden to Fore.

Bill went all out in the tenth, scoring two of his points with service aces, and another with a resounding kill from deep backcourt.

Next to his volleying, Lott's most effective weapon was his twisting, high-bounding service. It re-peatedly pulled Tilden out of position, allowing George to rush in and polish off Bill's return.

After a 10-minute intermission, Lott returned with Lester Stoefen to engage Tilden and Ellsworth Vines in doubles.

Hall Defeated; Wood Scared

Florida Boys Surprise in Miami Tennis.

MIAMI, Jan. 8 (AP).—Two youthful Floridians provided the thrills and spills today in the quarterfinal round of the Miami Biltmore tennis tournament.

Sidney B. Wood, jr., of New York, America's No. 2 player, narrowly escaped defeat by 17-year-old Frank Guernsey, of Orlando, State singles champion. Wood finally won, 3—6, 8—6, 10—8.

Arthur Hendrix, of Lakeland, from which the Orlando schoolboy recently lifted the State title, eliminated J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J., 6—2, 6—1, for his second giant-slaying act in two days. Hendrix yesterday trounced Marcel Rainville, of Montreal, the Canadian Davis Cup ace.

E. and H. Students Would Keep Pilot

Sign Petition Asking That Jackson Remain.

Emory, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—In two meetings this week the Emory and Henry College student body unanimously requested the college trustees and faculty to "take every possible step to keep Coach W. S. Jackson at Emory."

Sammy Neal, of Roanoke, president of the Wasps' student body, said the students had signed a petition to this efftct and would present it to the president of the college, Dr. J. N. Hillman, today.

The students' action followed the recent disclosure by the Bristol Herald-Courier that a prominent group of King College alumni and Bristol business men had approached Jackson with a view of having him become a coach at King. The Herald-Courier said Bristol business men would underwrite his salary at King.

Late Date, Odds-on Favorite, Defeats West Main in Feature Race at Tropical Park

Choices Win Majority of Events

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., Jan. 9 (AP).—Short-priced horses performed according to Hoyle in a majority of the races here today and form players had a royal opportunity to recoup earlier losses at the meeting. Their major success came with the running of the Anclote, mile and a sixteenth feature offering, which went to the Audley Farm's Late Date. The mare, showing the benefit of one local outing, exhibited rare gameness to score by a length and a half. William Sachsenmaier's West Main was a tired second, a like distance before George Boehle's Major General.

Late Date closed at $3.90 for $2. Her time was 1:45 1-5. The racing strip has been cut up and resold and consequently horses were running in comparatively slow time today.

The 6-year-old daughter of Hourless had to withstand repeated challenges before finally shaking off her opposition. Major General hung close to the favorite along the backstretch, and when he found the pace too swift, West Main took his fling. This fellow headed Late Date around the final bend, but the Audley mare proved her stout-heartedness in the stretch and drew off. The old campaigner, Dr. Freeland, was unable to threaten Major General for show honors.

Transport Triumphs.

The talent began the day right when they selected Transport in the 6-furlong opening event here this afternoon. Vigorously ridden by Eddie Arcaro, the $4.50-for-$2 choice finished three lengths clear of Bobby Buxton. Little Cynic was daylight away from the place. Bobby Buxton dashed into an early lead, but was joined by the favorite entering the last half of the journey. Transport received a whip lashing and moved away in the run home.

Mantados, $5.60 favorite, ran a game race to take the second purse by three parts of a length from Mickey's Man. Shan was a distanced third. All but one of the eight starters raced so closely aligned on the backstretch that they could have been covered by a blanket. However, they were well strung out at the finish. Mantados and Mickey's Man shot out from the bunch around the bend, with the former having the more left for the stretch drive.

Gamaliel Gets Home.

Jimmy Hunter gave Gamaliel a hustling ride to get Mrs. G. D. Widener's sprinter first home by a length in the third contest. The gelding paid the liberal price of $10.80. Headin Home had less than a length advantage over the despised Winged Flight for second money. Pass Up, the favorite, stopped as if shot after taking a brief lead. Gamaliel assumed command and held on well in the closing drive.

Scotch Tom, well ridden by the veteran H. Louman, made good for form players in the fourth. Backed down to slightly more than 2 to 1, the choice overhauled Donny Black early and sped to the judges three lengths on top. Masked Queen, a field horse, closed a big gap to earn the place by two lengths from Long Count.

Pete Walls, who just forsook riding for training after many years in the saddle, sent Playofk, a three-year-old maiden acquired from J. D. Norris' Peconic stable, to the post in this race. Carrying the brand new silks of Pete's wife, the colt went to the front and gradually fell back to sixth place.

Hermie Roy Awakes.

Hermie Roy, the plater that turned a remarkable form flip-flop when he won by eight lengths and got himself and his trainer investigated at Bowie last fall, woke up in like fashion in the sixth event. Beaten off in his recent local outing, the fickle gelding today uncovered high speed. He galloped in front all the way and won by five lengths, running the mile in 1:39 1-5. Sun Cloister, a long shot, was second by two lengths over Gallic. The latter was an odds-on favorite and never could threaten. The winner paid $6.80.

Eddie Arcaro scored his second success of the day in the finale when he drove Barney Sexton, $6.40 favorite, to a nose victory over Morning Fair in the final event. Pencader was third.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

Less than a century ago, when tea was a rather high priced beverage in Europe, and when international shipping and distribution were poorly systematized, the element of time was a highly important one in the tea trade. Shippers strove to get their vessels loaded and away from the Chinese ports with each new season's crop before competitors were able to. Then the race was on to Europe, because the first load in would command a better price than later shipments.

This situation brought about the famous races halfway around the world, which survive after a fashion today in the purposeless grain races from Australia. Strangest of the tea races of record was the one in 1866 out of Foochow, when three small sailing vessels cleared the port at the same time for London, 16,000 miles away. Ninety-nine days later they all docked at their destination within two hours of each other.

Paul Robinson, who began playing the harmonica when he was 5 years old, set a new world endurance record by playing from Thursday morning to the following Saturday night. During all that time he was on top a department store in Reading, Pa., and his music was heard by the crowds in the streets below via a public address system. During his 57 hours he lost 9 pounds, blistered his lips and played 3,502 selections. He lived on a liquid diet, which he took through a straw—playing his harmonica with his nose at the same time.

20 Teams at Virgina.

University, Va., Jan. 9.—The University of Virginia is sponsoring 20 athletic teams this year. Ten of these are in varsity competition, ten in freshman sports.

Twenty Grand Comeback Delayed

Mud Causes Star to Idle, Race Called Off; Wise Daughter Winner.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 9 (AP). Wise Daughter, coupled with Whiskolo as the Milky Way Farms entry, won the Yosemite Handicap, a six furlong dash for 3-year-olds and up as the mudders had a field day at Santa Anita track today.

Odds-on favorite the 4-year-old Wise Daughter defeated Marooned by a nose with Croon third, three lengths behind. Whiskolo was fourth. The time was 1:13 2-5.

Our Mae Victor At New Orleans

New Orleans, Jan. 9 (AP).—Our Mae, a 3-year-old filly which finished second in her two previous starts at the Fair Grounds, today did not stop in the stretch, winning the 6-furlong top event for E. K. Bryson.

The daughter of Our General, a speed demon from the barrier, broke on top and set all the pace. She was five lengths in front of F. P. Letellier's Exotude at the head of the stretch and reached the judges' stand with three lengths to spare over the same horse. W. L. McCue's Little Duke was third in the field of six.

Strongly supported in the mutuels, Our Mae paid the short odds of $3.80 for a $2 win ticket after covering the three-quarters in 1:13 flat.

Busy Biff Is Winner In Alamo Downs Dash

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 9 (AP). Biff, a heavy campaigner among the platers, chalked up his second victory of the Alamo Downs meeting today when he carried Fred Ianni's silks to victory in the mile and 70 yards of the Kiwanis Club handicap.

Dear Al: Tropical Park Race Track, Jan. 9.

J. E. Widener, president of the Miami Jockey Club, will not be at fault if the Hialeah race meeting is not a success. He is putting up prizes for both trainers and jockeys to be contested during the long session which starts a week from tomorrow. There will be three $500 prizes for trainers—one each 15 days. In order to give them all a chance a point system will be used with four points for each winner, two for second and one for third. Incidentally, G. E. Alexandra is leading the trainers at this track with ten winners. The leading jockey at Hialeah will be presented with a gold watch appropriately inscribed. Speaking of prizes, I'm trying to think of something suitable for that foot race around the track that I'm trying to promote between Clocker Mike and Trainer Joe. I caught both of them running today at different times. I accused them of trying to sneak in a little conditioning, but they both denied that their fast moving has any connection with their argument about which is the best foot slinger. I honestly believe this race is taking shape. I shall keep you posted. BILL.

First race—The baby racers will have their innings in the opening event and I'm forced to make a sort of grab-bag guess. I'll take Hastemond, Camden and Zowie. The last named comes recommended by several good works.

Second race—Opinion turned in a rousing effort last out and the prospect of Don Meade doing the riding makes me name this one on top of the heap. Smooth Crossing breaks off the rail under the guidance of Horn and may be the one to beat. Full Up seems to have a grip on the show award. Energetic Boy will win soon and has an outside chance here.

Third race — Fred Almy wins when not too stoutly opposed. Finds a field here that may bow to his brand of speed and I'm stringing along. Pryor and Protagonist to take care of the place and show.

Fourth race—Seawick appears to be the class of this group. Draws a capable rider in Bobby Merritt and I see no reason for mistakes. Royal Duchess apparently is better than rated. Has two purses to her credit here. Happy Flag should complete the money bracket.

Fifth race—The Smallman Entry of Prince Drake and Herowin will have a lot to say about the purse distribution here. Both are fit and ready. Broadsword looms as a serious contender and, with Gilbert in best riding form, will be close at pay-off time. Moane Keala may be the surprise of the field.

Sixth race—Stegal has that recent fine race to recommend him in this mile event. Foxy Agnes is a filly of the improving sort and may have to be reckoned with in the stretch run. Bellator, a winner at Bowie, might awake with a bang.

Seventh race—I'm sticking to Little Argo although I would like to see this promising distance horse get a few days' rest. This one packs a punch despite the fact that he took a beating the other day. M. J. Brennan is consistent and dangerous. So is Gifted Lady.

Eighth race—Flowery Lady, Corrymeela and Phara is the way I prefer them in the finale. The last named is the maiden that I've been expecting to score any day.

Generals and Carolina Meet on Court Tonight

Lexington, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—Victorious over St. John's by a 37-26 score in its first game of the season, Washington and Lee's basket ball team will journey across the Blue Ridge tomorrow night for a game with a much tougher foe, the fast-stepping Tar Heels, of North Carolina. The game, to be played in the new armory at Lynchburg, will be the initial Southern Conference court battle for the Generals, champions of the circuit by virtue of their tournament play in Raleigh last year.

Although they took the lead and held it after five minutes of play against St. John's here Monday night, the Generals found the going rough part of the way, and will have to polish up their floor work and passing if they are to subdue the Tar Heels. Washington and Lee's defense, however, was excellent at times, with the veteran Bob Field and the flashy sophomore Norman Iler playing at guard positions.

TRANSPORT was hard ridden for the last three furlongs, and was drawing away in last sixteenth. BOBBY BUXTON, showing a high turn of speed, ran into lead, saved ground, and was next best. LITTLE CYNIC broke very slow and was bothered at the break, closed ground gamely, and might have been a stout contender with a better start. YENOOR ran a fair race. RARE BEN showed a flash of speed.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3-year-old colts and geldings. Start good. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 2:42. Off at once. Winner, L. Leone's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MANTADOS, $5.60, $3.30, $2.60; MICKEYS MAN, $4.50, $3.00; SHAN, $3.40.

MANTADOS broke well, followed the pace to top of stretch, where he went to the front and won under a hard drive. MICKEYS MAN was kept on the inside all the way, and tired badly in final 100 yards. SHAN, on the outside to stretch, closed very fast. KINDRED SPIRIT was hard ridden all the way, but failed to close any ground. EARLE MAXWELL closed a big gap.

THIRD RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $700. The Miccosukee. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:14½. Off at 3:17. Winner, Mrs. George D. Widener's ch. g. GAMALIEL, under strong riding, raced PASS UP into defeat early, drew away around turn, but was doing his best to stall off the determined bid of HEADIN' HOME. The latter, a bit slow to get into his stride, closed very fast on inside. WINGED FLIGHT, showing marked improvement, finished gamely. FLIGHT OF GOLD ran a fair race. PASS UP had speed for three furlongs, then stopped badly. MARIO showed a flash of early speed.

LONG COUNT came from far back, and was a fast-going third. DONNY BLACK tired badly after showing early speed. DONNA TUTTI had speed for six furlongs.

LATE DATE, well ridden and showing a high turn of speed, ran into lead going into first turn, was rated along to top of stretch, where she had to be ridden hard to regain the lead, and then drew away. WEST MAIN moved up with a rush turning out of back stretch, assumed lead on turn, but weakened badly. MAJOR GENERAL got away fast, showed good speed, but weakened under the weight. DR. Boxing Hopes Are High at Maryland the learned leather throwers can figure out whether they are in the ring with one opponent or three opponents, he usually has managed to land a left hook in a vital spot. Once the left hook is landed in a vital spot, the opposition is slowed down so that Lyman can pick them to pieces at his leisure—if they're still right side up.

Also from Washington comes the Maryland 165-pounder, one Jack Herbsleb. A good natural boxer, with a good right-hand punch, Herby lacks only one thing to make him a great fighter—aggressiveness. Day after day Coach Harmony has hammered at him to make him carry the fight to gymnasium opponents, just to get in the habit. How effective Harmony's efforts have been will be disclosed once the Maryland season gets under way.

McCaw Again Ready.

Stewart McCaw, Maryland's Southern Conference light heavyweight champion, will be back in the berth in which he won his laurels last year. The Rochester, N. Y., senior, while a good boxer and better puncher, specializes in aggressiveness. That aggressiveness carried him undefeated through the crucible of the conference tournament, and barring mishap, should again put him on top.

The loss of Al Farrell in the heavyweight position would have proven disastrous last year. At that time Carl Stalfort, now a junior, was green and awkwardly inexperienced. He could be hit with anything, and usually was. Under the careful guidance of Harmony, he has developed into a much better boxer.

Stalfort Improved.

It still isn't necessary to toss a handful of rice at Stalfort to hit him, but he won't be plopped with the "gates ajar" wallops for which he was such a prominent target last season. He has improved as a boxer without losing the aggressiveness that always has been his. His right works nicely and his left hook should mow down some of the broad targets that will be tossed at him.

Lieut. Jack Harmony, coach of the team who has brought harmony to what once was a squad of fighters with few if any assets but the sheer urge to punch people, is confident that his team will finish no worse than third in the conference.

"Who can tell this year?" Harmony asks. "With so many good teams in the running, anyone may win. I do know that had we had this squad last year, we would have won the conference championship. That was last year. This year competition probably will be the toughest it ever has been, but you never can tell what a Maryland team will do, can you?"

Harmony probably knows more about boxing than 98 per cent of college coaches. He usually is sporting a black eye or bent nose inflicted upon him in the inevitable workouts with his charges. At the present time his left eye is in mourning and one of his ribs is cracked.

Variety of Fighters.

Unlike many boxing coaches, Harmony dose not attempt to mold each boxer along a certain specified line. He let's 'em develop in the style most natural to them, then corrects their flaws. As a result you will find crouchers, hookers, stand-up-straight boxers and practically every assortment of fighter on his squads.

"Its foolish to attempt to make a boy box the way he doesn't want to box," the lieutenant explains. "Supposing somebody had tried to make Jack Dempsey a stand-up-straight, hit-and-run expert, or Gene Tunney a crouching, charging bruiser. Neither would have been a champion, would he?"

So saying, the professor donned a pair of gloves and hopped into the ring to get his other eye blackened.

Romans Outdid Us In Building Bowl

and brick walls and pillars, was a labyrinth of locker rooms, dressing rooms, showers, dens for wild animals, runways for them, prisons for the condemned criminals and Christians, and store rooms for the vast collection of properties used in the shows. The arena could also be flooded and used for a swimming pool.

Conveniently placed, too, were the spots that correspond to our first aid stations, and hospital rooms. Only they used them for a slightly different purpose. Any of the boys, who were dragged in alive there after a fight, were finished off there. You didn't survive to read or hear about your defeat the next day. If you lost, you never needed an alibi.

The wooden floor of the amphitheater was covered with sand. We use tanbark in the American circus because it is soft and springy and gives a good foothold. The Romans had a reason for using sand. It absorbed the blood of the fighters, and prevented them from slipping in their own gore. The Latin word for sand was "rena" or "arena," which is still the name for the pit or floor of any stadium. You've held "side-arena" seats in the Garden. It began just that way.

Revamped George Washington Five Upsets N. Y. City College in 43-32 Thriller

2,500 Watch Kiesel Lead Colonials

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A GROSSLY under-rated George Washington rolled up its sleeves and went to work on the boys from City College of New York last night at Tech High School, and worked industriously and harmoniously enough to finish on the long end of a 43-32 count.

A throng of 2,500 fans that put several vocal dents in the Tech roof and the tin ear of one player, saw the revamped Washington team score its first decision over the Gothamites in three years.

George Washington outwitted, outfought and naturally outscored Nat Holman's charges to keep the bacon in the G street larder, and the leader of the Colonial charge was Moe Berg. Berg directed the team in masterful fashion, drawing City College out of its defensive formation time and again to provide scoring opportunities for his men.

Fans Feared the Worst.

Until late in the final period when G. W. definitely had established itself as a genuine contender the majority of the customers still harbored the fear that City would rally and eventually stalk off with the laurels. But these good souls' trepidations were eased as the final few minutes of play ticked away and G. W. began to make a track meet of the evening.

The first half produced close, exciting and smart basket ball, with honors evenly divided at the intermission which found the teams deadlocked at 21-all. Five times the lead changed hands, with the downtown school coming from behind to knot the count on Ben Goldfadden's pot shot.

Hal Kiesel, G. W.'s string-beany center who garnered scoring honors with 17 points, kept the team in the argument during the earlier minutes of play by scoring eight of G. W.'s first 10 points. Big Bill Noonan came to his assistance eventually, and the two of them managed to keep the Colonial banner aloft until their mates found the range.

Three Visitors Chased.

Capt. Sam Winograd, who, with Sol Kopitko and Milt Levine, was later ejected from the game because of four personal fouls, started City's scoring with a pass to Phil Levine who dropped a snowbird. The two were City's big guns, scoring 21 of the teams total. RULE

Two converted fouls by Berg presented G. W. with a 23-21 lead at the start of the second half, but Pincus agani tied the score for City with a neat one-hand shot from the side. That was the last time the Lavender played on even terms with their hosts, for Kiesel's snowbird and two fuols by Noonan gave G. W. a 27-23 lead and it was never headed.

The Beaver's pendulum passing attack, designed to open up G. W.'s defense for a shot close in to and in front of the goal, stalled in the face of the effective guarding of Noonan nad Kiesel. It was not contest after Kiesel, Leemans and Goldfadden prodded the locals into a 39-30 lead with a scant minute to play left.

City resorted to long, but erratic potshots in a futile effort to overtake the flying Colonials.

Robert T. Keane Heads Yacht Club

Capital Group Is Seeking River Improvements.

KEANE

The club, which is a member of the President's Cup Regatta Association, made plans to participate in the outstanding event next year as well as other acquatic activities on the Potomac.

The organization also voted to exert every influence at its command to secure improvement of the Washington waterfront. Many prominent yachtsmen have been campaigning for the waterfront improvement for some time. It is one of the purposes of the regatta to call attention to the poor facilities Washington has on the Potomac. Much agitation has developed lately over the proposed dredging of the Potomac to give a longer course for the regatta.

Other officers elected by the Capital Yacht Club were: Vice commodore, Paul T. Myers; secretary and treasurer, D. H. Fowler; measurer, R. R. Baker; board of directors, G. W. Forsberg, Walter G. Moyle and George E. Sullivan.

Navy Crushes V. M. I. Five By 54-22

Borries Paces Middies to Easy Victory; Three Teams Are Used.

ANNAPOLIS, Jan. 9.—With a display of the form and trickery that made him famous on the basket ball court last season, Capt. Buzz Borries led the Navy quintet to an easy victory over Virginia Military Institute here today by a score of 54-22.

The Tars used three full teams at different stages of the game, and the understudies also showed to advantage. Today's contest was marked by greater snap than the inaugural last Saturday, when the Middies overwhelmed Baltimore University, 53-22.

Borries started things for Navy within 30 seconds after play began when he scored from the court and Dusty Dornin got a double-decker immediately afterward. Though the Virginians were battling desperately, they were almost powerless to fathom Navy's attack. And after piling up a score of 24-7 in 12 minutes, the home team regulars gave way to the first group of substitutes. The Virginians managed to hold the newcomers on even terms, each team tallying 6 points, so that the score at half time was: Navy, 30; V. M. I., 13.

The Navy mainstays returned to the floor at the opening of the second half, and it was at this juncture that Borries showed his most dashing play, scoring three times in rapid succession. During the next few minutes, the military lads gathered defensive strength and checked the Navy assault to some extent and there was a decided lull in scoring.

But, with the game safely in hand, Borries and his mates again retired, and during the final stages of play, two sets of subs worked against the enemy. Hancock and Clark proved the most capable players of the visitors.

C. U. Conquers Terror Five, 56 to 29

Brilliant Spurt in Closing Period Turns Back W. Maryland.

GAINING revenge for a 2-to-0 defeat suffered in football, Catholic University's baseball team turned loose in full fury on Western Maryland last night at Brookland, winning by the unexpectedly large count of 56 to 29.

After being given a tight battle in the first half, the Cardinals opened up for all they were worth in the closing period with a brilliant display of scoring and passing power before which the Terrors appeared powerless.

Coach Fod Cotton used ten men against the invaders, and all seemed to be able to handle the ball with considerable skill. Babe Gearty, guard; Bernie Lieb, center, and Herman Schmarr, forward, a trio of fast-moving boys with eagle eyes for the hoops, led the Cardinal bombardment, scoring 15, 13 and 10 points, respectively. Lieb easily could have walked off with high-point honors, but unselfishly passed to his mates when the opportunity to crack the hoops presented itself.

Lieb Among Stars.

Mergo, sturdy Western Maryland left guard, featured for the visitors. He scored 12 points.

The first half was fought in ding-dong fashion, with the Cardinals trailing after 5 minutes, taking the lead at 9-6 after 8 minutes of play, and forging ahead 18-16 at intermission. Brown's zipping sidehand toss broke the tie just a second before the half whistle tooted.

September 28, Virginia Military Institute, at New Orleans.

October 5, Auburn, at New Orleans; 12, Florida, at New Orleans; 19, Minnesota, at Minneapolis; 26, Sewanee, at New Orleans.

November 2, Colgate, at New Orleans; 9, Georgia, at Athens; 16, Kentucky, at New Orleans; 23, open; 30, Louisiana State, at New Orleans.

Harrisonburg Five Defeats Lane, 18 to 17

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.). Harrisonburgh High School quintet came over the mountain and gained a 1-point victory over Lane High here tonight, 18 to 17.

Both teams put up a good brand of ball throughout. The valley squad led at half time, 11 to 10, and at the end of the third quarter still held a 1-point lead, 14 to 13.

Tambo, a flashy forward, registered 14 of Harrisonburg's 18 points.

8th Straight to Roosevelt Five, 32-7

Gonzaga Is Held Scoreless for Two Periods; 19 Points to Kolius.

MATCHING its scoring power with as impressive a defense, Roosevelt High smothered Gonzaga High, 32 to 7, yesterday on the Roosevelt court to win its eighth straight victory of the season. The Rough Riders have yet to be defeated.

Coach Lynn Woodworth started his reserves, using his regulars only for a portion of the last half. The substitutes took a 13-to-4 lead before the half-time intermission with the first stringers, and another interjection of substitutes finishing the process in the last two periods.

Spiro Kolius, Roosevelt's high-scoring forward, had another big day, scoring 19 points, including 9 baskets, though playing less than 15 minutes of the game.

Defensive Record.

The Rough Riders set or equaled some kind of scholastic basket-ball defensive record when they held the Purple scoreless throughout the second and third periods.

Roosevelt will play the George Washington Freshmen this afternoon at the G. W. gym, but with the interhigh series opener against Tech listed for tomorrow, the Rough Rider regulars will not be in uniform. Coach Woodworth is planning to use his reserves only.

Fritzi Steifel Rated Best In W. Va.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—Miss Fritzi Steifel, of Wheeling, seven times women's golf champion of West Virginia, has been voted as the State's outstanding 1934 athlete by the West Virginia Sports Writers' Association.

Miss Steifel was chosen by a margin of ten votes over her nearest competitor in a field that included amateur stars in all types of sports.

Thomas Bolch, of Wheeling, State amateur golf champion, was the runner-up. He won the golf title from Fred Bannerot, jr., of Charleston, last year, 8 and 7, at White Sulphur Springs.

Now on World Tour.

Miss Steifel, daughter of Mrs. E. W. Steifel, is the only West Virginia woman with an outstanding record of achievement in national tourneys. She shoots consistently in the low 80's on championship courses, but has often been in the 70's in tournament competition. She is now on a world tour and probably will not return home in time to defend her West Virginia title in July at White Sulphur.

The ranking of other amateur athletes given by the sports writers included, next in order, Tommy Coleman, Huntington High School's all-State backfield football star; Miss Frances Grimes, of Morgantown, State University sophmore and State open tennis champion, known for her records in women's doubles and mixed doubles, having played in Western Maryland singles and doubles and in the District of Columbia, and Leonard "Feets" Barnum, West Virginia Wesleyan's full back and basket ball and track star.

Coach Tebell Ponders Shakeup of Cavaliers

University, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.).—Gus Tebell, Virginia's basket ball coach, may offer a revised team for action against William and Mary here on Thursday and against Washington and Lee, the defending champions of the Southern Conference, in Lexington on Saturday.

Virginia's basketeers made far too many mistakes against the University of Richmond Monday night to suit the Cavalier coach. He is willing to credit the Spiders with rare accuracy in their shooting, but he is far from pleased with the performance of his charges.

Hoyas to Face Strong Foes On Trip

N.Y.U., Manhattan, Temple, All Unbeaten, Will Be Opposed.

GEORGETOWN essays a Jack-the-Giant-Killer role this week-end on its second northern trip of the basket ball season that will bring it up against three of the East's most powerful quintets, all of which are undefeated thus far. New York U., Manhattan and Temple are the giants the Hoyas are stalking.

Victorious in 23 consecutive games, 6 of them played this season, New York U. looms as the Hoyas' most formidable opponent. The Violet numbers Notre Dame, Kentucky, Lafayette and Columbia, all top-notch teams, among its victims, and will be a prohibitive favorite to stop Coach Fred Mesmer's men.

Temple Is Stronger.

Temple swamped Indiana, after the Hoosiers had defeated Maryland and George Washington on successive nights in this city, and is rated 50 per cent stronger than last year, when it dropped a 30-to-20 decision to Georgetown in Washington.

Manhattan's opponents have not been of the high caliber that New York's or Temple's were, but the Jaspers usually have good ball clubs, as that 26-to-15 win over Georgetown last season will attest, and figure to repeat.

Mesmer probably will use the same starting line-up that took the floor in the first three games. Ed Hargaden and Don Gibeau will be at forwards; Chubby Parcells, center, and Joe Corless and Ben Zola, guards.

Hugo Bonino Captain Of Generals' Wrestlers

Lexington Va., Jan. 9 (AP).—The Washington and Lee wrestling team today announced its selection of Hugo Bonino, of Hawthorne, N. J., Southern Conference heavyweight titleholder, as captain of the team this year.

Bonino was a mainstay of the mat team which won the Southern Conference title last year without defeat. He went to the semifinals in the national tournament last year.

As guard on the football team Bonino won wide recognition last fall and was placed on All-South Atlantic teams and mentioned for Southern Conference honors.

Episcopal and Alexandria Work Out

Today's Scrimmage Will Aid Teams; Week-end Games Plentiful.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Jan. 9 (Spl.) Episcopal High School and Alexandria High School will hold a scrimmage game in the Episcopal gym tomorrow afternoon.

The Twins have a busy week-end. They travel to Ballston Friday night, to play the Washington-Lee High School, in a game that will involve three conference titles, the Inter-Suburban League, the Third District, and the mythical Northern Virginia title.

Three of Alexandria's varsity performers are on the sidelines. Jack Lynch, center, is suffering from an attack of grip. Frank Brewer, forward, has not recovered from an injury to his arm. Benny Burrell, forward, has aggravated an ankle injury.

Lee-Jackson High will entertain Falls Church High in a double-header attraction at the Lee-Jackson gymnasium, Friday night, beginning at 7 o'clock.

Columbia Fire Department meets the Bavello Plumbers Friday night in the Armory Hall. The DeMolay Seniors will perform against an unnamed team in the preliminary attraction.

Eastern Defeats Little Generals

Washington-Lee Bows by 40-18; Shaner Stars.

Eastern High first stringers played only a little over one period against Washington-Lee High yesterday, but it was enough to carry the Lincoln Parkers to a 40-to-18 triumph and their third win of the year. The game was played on the Eastern floor.

Starting the game with Crisaful and Lichliter, forwards, Miller, center, and Morgul and Donohue, guards, Coach Charlie Guyon saw the Little Generals take a 14-to-13 lead in the first half before inserting his regulars.

With the opening of the third period, the latter group, led by Capt. Lavelle Dean, took over the situation and ran the advantage up to 34 to 14 before being taken out shortly after the start of the last quarter. Dean tallied four baskets during his short period in the game, but Buddy Shaner, Eastern center, took the scoring honors with 9 points. Coach Guyon used 14 men.

Lynchburg Bows, 38-24, To Wilson Teachers

Wilson Teacher College continued its rise to basket ball prominence last night by administering a sound 38-to-24 defeat to Lynchburg at the George Washington gymnasium. The wide margin of victory by which the Teachers turned back the Virginians came as something of an upset in view of the ratings of the teams prior to game, in which Lynchburg was held a slight favorite to win.

Ollie Tipton, former all-high star scored 17 points to lead the Washington five to victory. The Teachers led all the way, holding a 15 to 8 advantage at the half.

Eastern High Defends School Court Crown With Strong Team, but Respects Tech Five

By John R. Vosburgh.

EASTERN HIGH rallies to the defense of its basket ball championship this year with one of the strongest squads a defending titleholder has been able to present. But, for all the talent he has available, wise Charlie Guyon, taking over Eastern's basket ball future this season after a lay-off of several years, is refusing to predict that Eastern will retain the championship.

The veteran, gray-haired chief has a reason. Too much respect has he for a group of five or six well-drilled lads carrying the colors of Tech this year—the same boys who lifted the Maroon into a tie for the runner-up honors to astern last season—to forecast another championship for the Lincoln Parkers.

In the clipped, blunt sentences of his Indian race, Chief Charlie merely will tell you that "if Tech doesn't win, we win." He might go on to say that he does not think Tech has any better team than Eastern, but whether he thinks Eastern has a better chance of winning the title than Tech is another thing.

"Very much depends on Central, Western and Roosevelt," says the chief. "What they do to Tech or Eastern probably will make the champion."

If Eastern's hopes depended entirely upon Capt. Lavelle Dean, however, Coach Guyon would not hesitate to predict the result. Not only, says the chief, has Dean a miraculous eye, speed and about everything else a basket ball player needs, but despite his lanky frame, he can hold his own against the toughest of opponents. The chief went on to describe how Dean has handled opponents considerably bigger as well as did giant Charlie Crosan.

In addition to Dean, who tallied 78 points in the series last year as runner-up for the individual scoring honors, Guyon has Gay Edelin, a second-team All-High choice last year, who is pairing with Dean at guard. Buddy Shaner, at center; Charlie Scheible and Chick Hollidge at forward have been working with the two series stars of last year like clockwork. Ed Miller, young Chick Colley, Joe Crisaful and Bill Buchholtz comprise a substitute quartet which gives the Lincoln Parkers probably the strongest reserve strength in the series.

Eastern has played but three games this season, trouncing St. John's, 53-35; John Marshall, of Richmond, 35-24, and Alexandria, 52 to 27. The John Marshall victory impressed a number of the coaches looking on at the University of Richmond scholastic basket ball carnival Saturday to the extent that they spoke of Eastern as the class of the tournament along with Central.

There is no question but what Eastern has a team of championship caliber. But there is also no question but what there is more than one team in the series of championship caliber.

Wheat Values Decline Under Profit Taking

Cotton Prices Decline 3 to 8 Points; May Sells at 12.70.

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—Concentrated profit-taking sales on price advances led to late setbacks both in wheat and corn markets today, and more than wiped out earlier gains.

Orders to sell May wheat at $1.02 a bushel filled the speculative pit with surplus offerings as the day drew to an end, with demand from buyers inadequate to give the market sufficient support. Talk of possibility the United States Government would acquire 10,000,000 bushels of Pacific Coast wheat for purposes of relief failed to be confirmed.

Wheat closed easy at the day's bottom level, ½ to ¾ under yesterday's finish; May, 1.01 to 1.01⅛; corn, ⅜ to 1 cent down; May, 90¾ to 90⅞; oats, ⅛ to ½ off, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 10 cents.

Late downturns of grain prices were in the face of predictions current that the Government report tomorrow on farm reserve stocks of wheat, corn and oats as of January 1 would show the smallest totals on record, with the corn supply not enough to last until the end of the season. On the other hand, mild weather prevailing throughout the domestic grain belt tended at times to emphasize reports of lessened demand from feeders of live stock. In this connection, it was noticed that all through the day, corn showed a somewhat heavier tone than wheat did.

Exports today 5,215, making 2,658,689 so far this season. Port receipts 6,566. Port stocks 2,993,649.

Cotton Market

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—Cotton held within a range of 10 points today and the market closed barely steady at net declines of 3 to 8 points.

There was little more hedging here during the afternoon when May sold off at 12.70 and July to 12.74, or about 7 to 8 points below yesterday's finals. January and the new crop months were relatively quiet and steady. Closing quotations were at or within a point of the lows.

Cotton Seed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil closed easy today 8 to 15 points net lower on sales of 75 contracts. Scattered liquidation in advance of the Government Census Bureau report on cotton seed products, combined with selling by houses with cotton connections and less tendency to support on the part of refiners, was the depressing factor. Crude oil was firm at 9½ cents, and lard, while closing under the highs of the day, averaged steady. Bleachable spot nominal; January closed 10.91, March 10.90, May 10.91, July, 10.92.

Federal Report on Textile Industry Reveals Increased Earnings Over Results of 1933; Sloan Lays Profits to Price Advances.

By Special Writer of The Post.

Following the recent strike in the cotton textile industry, the President instructed the Federal Trade Commission to make a report on the labor costs, investments and profits of textile companies. The immediate objective of this inquiry was to determine whether the industry could support an increase in wage rates under existing conditions, as maintained by certain labor leaders who claim that the cotton mills have been earning immense profits which they refuse to share with their employes. The inquiry was ordered at the end of September and in spite of the formidable character of the undertaking, the Federal Trade Commission has released a partial report on investment and profits which throws valuable light on the financial position of the industry.

Of course the commission had to rely largely upon data furnished by the companies, checking their accuracy as best it could in the limited time at its command. Of the 2,308 reports received, only 765, or approximately one-third, could be utilized. The others were either noncomparable or were too incomplete or faulty to be usable. However, the reports that constitute the basis of the findings cover over 40 per cent of cotton spindles, between 30 and 40 per cent of woolen and worsted spindles, and nearly 23 per cent of silk looms—a quite representative sample for the first two groups.

Reporting Companies' Investments Placed at $1,200,000,000.

The aggregate investment of all reporting companies amounted to $1,200,000,000, on which the companies earned on the average about 3.12 per cent (computed on an annual basis) during the first half of 1933. During the six months following the establishmet of NRA, earsings increased more than two and a half times, while the rate of return on total investment advanced to 7.95 per cent (on an annual basis). The advance was, however, succeeded by a sharp decline in earnings which brought the rate of return down to 3.35 per cent in the first half of 1934. In July and August, further declines resulted in an average loss of 2.77 per cent for all reporting companies (on an annual basis). For the cotton industry alone, the average loss was slightly less—2.17 per cent. Breaking down this average, it appears that 104 Northern mills showed an average loss of over 4 per cent, while 230 Southern mills reported a fractional gain of less than one-half of 1 per cent. This Northern group, moreover, averaged less than six-tenths of 1 per cent return on investment during the first half of 1933, slightly over 5 per cent during the last half of that year and about one-tenth of 1 per cent during the first half of 1934. In the face of this record the cotton industry seems to be justified in asserting that it is not able to shoulder higher labor costs.

However, the position of the industry is probably even less favorable than the reports of earnings would indicate. As George A. Sloan, chairman of the cotton textile code authority, points out, a large part of the profits achieved during the months succeeding introduction of the recovery program is attributable to an advance in prices which sharply raised the value of raw cotton and finished goods on hand. The Federal Trade Commission made no attempt to distinguish between profits resulting from such inventory appreciation and other profits, and probably could not have done so had it tried. For that reason, Mr. Sloan asks that the commisson complete its studies of profits for the period subsequent to July 1, 1934. During the first two months of that time, profits from rising inventories had been largely eliminated and Mr. Sloan believes that this later period will supply the real test of the industry's present earning capacity, as determined by the difference between actual operating costs at current prices and current selling prices.

Sloan Suggests Appraisals Of Mills to Fix Values.

Mr. Sloan also suggests that the Federal Trade Commission should make a careful appraisal to see whether the book value of mill investments is not below original cost or even present value. In his opinion, many mills have erred on the side of over-conservatism in writing down these values. It has also to be remembered that the rate of return on investment has been computed before making deductions for interest and Federal income tax.

Rates on returns on stockholders' equities alone dropped from over 10 per cent on the average in the latter half of 1933 to a deficit of 3.64 per cent for all cotton mills, and a deficit of over 6 per cent for the Northern mills during July and August, 1934.

While an average does not reflect the position of all employing establishments, the returns made to the Federal Trade Commission strongly indicate that there is no surplus available for paying increased wages to labor in the cotton textile industry at the present time so far as the majority of establishments are concerned. With the margin between raw material costs and selling prices already narrowed to "alarmingly close figures," in the opinion of Mr. Sloan, the cotton industry should serve as a warning against the current clamor for a further shortening of working hours without corresponding reductions in pay.

Bond Market Moves Higher; Change Slight

Industrials Capture Peaks; Sales Volume Rises to $15,273,000.

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—The bond market was a highly selective affair today, and while first-grade corporate and Government bonds showed further improvement, there was some irregularity in other groups.

Reports from Washington claiming to tell something of the Government's intention in respect to long-term financing acted as a mild restraint upon Federal issues for a time. But aggressive buying later appeared and the entire group finished higher, including the Treasury 3s of '46, up ½ point, at 101.22, and Home Owners Loan 3s up 5-32s, at par.

Fractional Gains Recorded.

Fractional advances in a number of gilt-edged railroad and utility bonds were sufficient to carry them through the old 1934-35 highs.

Among such issues were Santa Fe 4½s, up ¼, at 108¼; Atlantic Coast Line 4s, up ¼, at 101¼; Connecticut Railway Light 5s, up ⅜, at 106⅛; Metropolitan Edison 5s, up ½, at 103½; Hocking Valley 4½s, up 1, at 113¾, and Pennsylvania 4½s, up ⅛, at 115⅛.

The Associated Press average for 10 industrials gained .71 of a point at 95.65, a new 1934-35 high, and 10 utilities averaged .28 of a point higher at 85.62. The average for 20 railroads was a minor fraction better.

Declines Are Scattered.

The steady accumulation of lower priced bonds of all types, which has resulted in substantial advances over the past few weeks, was not so much in evidence today and declines up to a point were well scattered through these issues.

Alleghany 5s lost 1¼ points at 64¼, Chicago & North Western refunding 5s were 1⅜ lower at 29, and International Telephone, 4½s yielded ⅞ at 70.

German 5½s gained 2 points at 33½ and the Dawes 7s were that much higher at 45. Other sections of the foreign list were quiet and without important change. Transfers aggregated $15,273,000, par value, compared with $13,671,000 on Tuesday.

Farm Income For 1934 Put At Eight Billion

New York, Jan. 9.—On the basis of the final 1934 crop estimates made by the Department of Agriculture, the Standard Statistics Co. now forecasts gross farm income at $8,056,000,000, an increase of 28 per cent as compared with the $6,256,000,000 realized from crops and live stock raised in 1933.

Of the total income, $7,356,000,000 is estimated as the return from marketings and the value of staples consumed on the farms. The remaining $700,000,000 is accounted for by benefit payments and drought relief disbursements. It has previously been expected that $1,000,000,000 would be distributed, but no more than 55 per cent to 60 per cent of the $525,000,000 appropriated for drought relief is believed to have been actually disbursed.

Federal subsidies represented a much smaller proportion of 1934 farm income than has been generally believed. The $700,000,000 directly distributed by the U. S. Government in 1934 represents only 8.7 per cent of the value of all crops and live stock. The ratio of Federal subsidies to the total farm income will probably be still lower in the current year.

London—Trading on the stock exchange was quieter today, but the tone was good. Gilt-edged securities were bought by big institutions and led the improvement in British issues. Gold mining and oil shares hardened, while other issues drooped. Transatlantic issues were uncertain. The market closed quiet.

Paris—Favorable reports from London caused a general advance on the bourse today which was led by electric and sugar issues, some of the latter gaining 50 points. Rentes were firm. The closing tone was steady.

Wool Market.

Boston, Jan. 9 (AP) (U. S. Dept. Agr.).—Most of the current trade in greasy combing domestic wools in the Boston market was on 64s and finer or fine grades. Inquiries even were restricted on the lower grades. Recent sales included moderate quantities of bulk French combing original bag lines of 64s and finer territory wools at 67@70 cents scoured basis and average twelve months Texas wools at 68@70 cents. An occasional buyer took a little fine Ohio delaine at 27@28 cents in the grease.

Steel Output Rate Rises to 44½; Prices of Scrap Advance Again

New York, Jan. 9.—Another sharp gain in steel production and a further advance in scrap prices have given the iron and steel market a buoyancy that it has lacked since the first half of 1934. Ingot output has risen 3½ points to 44½ per cent of capacity, a rate which it did not attain last year until the third week in February.

Scrap, as measured by the Iron Age composite for heavy melting steel, has been lifted from $11.75 to $12.33 a ton, its highest level since April, 1934.

Although the accelerating pace of automobile production accounts in large part for the current expansion of steel mill operations, the farm equipment industry continues to take more steel, tin plate specifications have improved, and sizable inquiries from the railroads have brightened the prospects for more active demand for heavier rolled products.

Only Cloud on Horizon.

The only cloud on the horizon, and one which has grown more threatening during the past week, is the disturbing outlook in industrial relations. The decision of the steel labor board ordering employe elections at two plants of the Carnegie Steel Co. has been challenged in petitions of employe representatives filed with Federal courts.

One effect of this move will be to block the elections at least during the court proceedings, which will probably take two to three months, and it may eventually lead to a test of the constitutionality of the labor tribunal's decision. Meanwhile, the labor board has ordered elections at several other steel company plants.

Fear of labor difficulties also hangs over the automobile industry, but assumptions that the current spurt in motor car production is mainly in anticipation of possible strikes later in the year are not well founded.

Estimates of Production.

The most conservative estimates place American and Canadian production for this year at 3,300,000 cars, or 275,000 a month. Since operations are customarily confined to about 10 months, output during the active period should average well over 300,000 a month. That figure will probably not be attained in the current month, notwithstanding the rapidly increasing pace of operations, but tentative schedules for February call for close to 380,000 units. Ford's production this month promises to be the largest for any January since Model-T days and schedules call for an increase in output at Rouge in February to 6,000 units a day from the present basis of 5,000.

Farm equipment and tractor manufacturers look for the largest spring trade since 1930, with a probable gain of 40 per cent over 1934.

Heavier releases from can makers have raised tinplate output to 45 per cent of capacity, or 10 points above holiday schedules. The outlook for tinplate business this year is particularly favorable, since consumer carryovers on January 1 were much lower than at the beginning of 1934.

Rail Inquiries on Hand.

Rail and fastening inquiries now before the industry or in early prospect total 136,000 tons. Included are 44,000 tons for the Norfolk & Western, 19,000 tons for the Burlington, 51,000 tons for a large Southern system, 20,000 tons for an Eastern road and 2,000 tons for a New York subway.

The New York Central has taken bids or is about to take tenders on track depression and elevation work in New York calling for 14,000 tons of steel. Expenditures by the railroads for freight car repairs in 1935 will total $65,000,000, according to Washington advices.

Fabricated structural steel awards of 28,200 tons compare with 16,525 tons a week ago. New projects total 25,950 tons as against 7,400 tons in the previous week. Plate lettings aggregate 6,400 tons, with new inquiries accounting for 4,800 tons. Pending sheet steel piling projects likely to be placed within the next three months total 25,000 tons.

Steel output has risen two points to 27 per cent at Pittsburgh, five points to 50 per cent at Chicago, one point to 28 per cent in the Philadelphia district, six points to 56 per cent in the Valleys, four points to 69 per cent at Cleveland, and 10 points to 90 per cent in the Wheeling district. Operations are unchanged at 66 per cent in Detroit, at 41 per cent in Buffalo and at 29 per cent in the South.

The Iron Age composite prices for pig iron and finished steel are unchanged at $17.90 a ton and 2.124 cents a pound, respectively.

Stocks Capture Minor Gains; Close Is Mixed

Midday Rallies Fail to Hold; Sales Drop to 880,000 Shares.

Oil stocks continued to reflect the nervousness of traders over the possibility that the Supreme Court's decision declaring the production control section of the national recovery act unconstitutional might result in a flood of "hot" oil.

Such leaders in the group as Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of California, Amerada and Shell Union preferred registered losses of around a half point.

Tobacco Shares Soft.

Tobacco shares were a soft spot, with American Tobacco B, Liggett & Myers B, and Reynolds B from fractions to 1½ points lower. Utilities were steady, and some leaders in that group showed fair gains. Consolidated Gas picked up more than a point on hopes of an amicable adjustment of its rate controversies with the regulatory authority through adoption of a "promotional" schedule of charges.

In some quarters it was felt that such an arrangement, patterned after the "Washington plan," might redound to the benefit of the company in the long run by encouraging greater use of power by consumers.

The better feeling in the utility group was furthered by the power consumption figures for the week of January 5. An increase of 6.7 per cent over the same week of 1934 was registered, compared with a gain of 7.2 per cent for the previous week. The latest figures included the New Year holiday period, and the improvement over the previous week was more than seasonal.

U. S. Steels Down.

Steels failed to respond noticeably to the Iron Age midweek review setting operations at 44½ per cent of capacity for the industry, a lift of 3½ points during the past week. U. S. Steel common and preferred were fractionally down, while other leaders in this division were steady or registered minor gains. An increase in the composite scrap price index compiled by the same publication, commonly regarded as presaging a further rise in steel operations, was likewise largely ignored.

Trading turnover was lighter than on Tuesday, with volume on the stock exchange at 880,000 shares. The Associated Press average of 60 selected stocks showed only a minor gain of .02 of a point at 40.84.

By Karl von Lewinski.

Retail sales in department and dry goods stores last year showed their first increase since 1929, rising 14.7 per cent above 1933 levels, according to a survey by the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

Supplementing the increase in dollar volume, the number of individual transactions in 1934 rose 10 per cent.

Total sales were shown to be 39 per cent below the 1929 peak levels, but only 25 per cent lower than in 1925, generally considered an average dry goods year.

Rural Areas Lead.

Geographically the best showing was made in agricultural sections, reflecting the influence of Government aid to the farmer.

Highest sales were in the Atlanta Federal Reserve District where sales rose 25.2 per cent. In the Dallas area gains of 23.5 per cent were reported and in the Chicago district they climbed 20.6 per cent.

Smallest of the gains were registered in the Boston area, where dollar volume advanced only 3.7 per cent. New York also trailed, with a rise of 7.2 per cent.

Curb's Prices Close Mixed In Light Sales

Utility Shares Improved as Day's Grading Drops to 147,000.

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—Price changes were slightly mixed at the close of the curb market today. Utilities shares were somewhat improved. Dealings were light.

Commonwealth Edison rose more than a point, while Electric Bond & Share and American Gas & Electric were fractionally higher. Among specialty shares, Celluloid Corporation, A. O. Smith and United Shoe Machinery were around a point higher. Losses of similar proportions were recorded by Aluminum Co. of America, Parker Rust Proof and Quaker Oats. Pepperell Manufacturing and Dow Chemical each dipped about 2.

Gulf Oil firmed 1¼ points, but other petroleum shares showed slight variations. Swift Internacionale, Hiram Walker, Pan American Airways and American Cyanamid B were steady. Newmont and Swift & Co. were slightly lower.

Transfers tapered to approximately 147,000 shares, compared with 209,000 yesterday.

Paint Industry Drives Onward

Trade Takes Vanguard in New Era of Intensified Activity.

New York, Jan. 9.—The recovery made by the paint trade during 1934 has placed it in the vanguard of the industries which are leading the way to a new era of intensified activity. There has been nothing spectacular accompanying the progress, but expansion was gradual and general, with the exception of a few dull months during the summer.

With production higher by 20 to 35 per cent than in 1933 and sales increased by 15 to 25 per cent in the same comparison, the strongest position since 1930 has been attained, while efficiency of operations and the maintenance of amicable trade practices are under the best control in the industry's history.

The contraseasonal broadening of demand for industrial paints since December 1 has led many manufacturers to estimate that output in 1935 will rise to the highest level since 1929. Almost without exception, manufacturers operated profitably during 1934, and many have been enabled to liquidate dividend arrears of two years' standing, according to a survey of the paint and wallpaper trade, which has just been completed by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

Electric Train Service To Capital Postponed

Inauguration of the Pennsylvania Railroad's new electrified train service between Washington and New York City has been held up probably until the middle of February, V. G. Nettlaton, representative of the carrier here, said yesterday.

The delay, he explained, is due largely to unfavorable weather, and some unlooked-for technical difficulties in installing electrical circuits along the right of way.

Liberty League Opposes Voting Of Lump Sums

Shouse Reveals Stand on Roosevelt Program, Lists Objectives.

(Associated Press.)

A 10-point platform advanced last night by the American Liberty League voiced opposition to the votng by Congress of lump sum appropriations such as the $4,000,000,000 for work relief asked by President Roosevelt.

The league, headed by Jouett Shouse and numbering among its members many wealthy and prominent persons, said Congress should specify how the funds it votes are to be spent rather than handing them over for use as the President desires.

Some of the phases of the platform adopted by the league's executive committee were:

To preserve American institutions and "to combat the growth of bureaucracy, the spread of monopoly, the socialization of industry and the regimentation of American life."

To uphold the principle that the levying of taxes and appropriation of funds with the designation of the manner in which they are to be spent are exclusively the functions of Congress.

To advocate economy in Government, a sound fiscal policy and the maintenance of a stable currency.

To further employment and rehabilitation and oppose Government interference and competition with private industry.

To oppose measures that threaten the security of invested savings and support those that protect them.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

Guy Lombardo, his brothers and his gang, rolled into town yesterday in a couple of gray buses. And, preceding these buses, like a presidential bodyguard, was a cruiser, marked in large letters, "Esso." This same cruiser parked in front of the Raleigh Hotel, later in front of the Fox, and was seen in many and very public places.

All of which leads one to ask a question or two. Answer is that the Lombardos will be heard over the air through a new sponsor, namely, Esso.

The WMAL broadcast last night was a closed and very special affair. No passes were distributed because of the limited space. What lucky listeners did get in went away with much thumping of chests, saying, "We heard Lombardo!"

Lombardos—In Person

Two of the famous band brothers, Guy and Carmen Lombardo, in informal pose. They are in Washington for only two days, fitting last night's WMAL broadcast into their schedule.

QUESTIONS and answers will be exchanged tonight when Felix Morley, editor of The Washington Post, and Harold G. Moulton, president of Brookings Institution, ask each other about "The 30-Hour Week." When they get through, all questions of yours should be answered. On WMAL, 10:30.

The scramble for the Hauptmann trial reports are due to late changes of schedule from N. B. C.'s New York studios. The Post's time table lists these broadcasts according to local N. B. C. information. If changes occur it is because they came in after the paper went to press. The table is made in the best of faith.

Big news spots occupy the "March of Time's" program tomorrow. Developments of the Hauptmann trial, the wrecking of the Havana, off Florida's coast, opening of the auto show in New York and the first congressional speech made by Huey Long this session are included.

The Voice of Experience has sold movie rights to "Stranger Than Fiction." He will supply vocal narratives to the 26 shorts to be made from the book. Film company can't be named at present.

Speeding Time.

Time hits up such a gait, the days scoot by so fast, when early it is late, and we all stand aghast. No speed cop chases Time along the dusty ways; no jurist, all sublime, can hand him 30 days. Regardless of all laws, old Time goes whizzing on; we never see him pause, he comes and he is gone. As we grow old and sere, Time hits a faster pace; year follows loping year, the speed is a disgrace. I look about the same as 15 years ago; but I am stiff and lame, my gait is weak and slow. I walk a furlong here, I teeter to the kirk, and with each passing year I find it harder work. The years go jogging by, their haste lacks sense and point; and I, who once was spry, have aches in every joint. And when I would proceed along the banks of thyme, I shift to second speed and then can scarcely climb. My cylinders all miss, my sparkplugs do not fire, my lungs, they wheeze and hiss, and easily I tire. And in the bygone days, when I was young and strong, Time loitered on his ways, he simply loafed along. A year seemed like an age in seasons long ago, and I was in a rage, Time moved along so slow. For children look ahead to festivals to come, and Time seems almost dead, and paralyzed and numb. Old men are looking back, their eyes all sad and dour, while Time scoots up the track, a hundred miles an hour.

Utility Firms Called 'Greedy' In U. S. Report

Trade Commission Flays Big Holding Companies; Legislation Drafted

"Greed and personal ambition to become dominating factors in the industry" were major motives in development of large utility holding companies, the Federal Trade Commission declared yesterday in a report on the growth and activities of such companies. The report was one of a series growing out of the commission's study of the utility business.

While the commission was joining President Roosevelt in lambasting the "evils of holding companies," Representative Sam Rayburn (Democrat), of Texas, announced he was preparing holding company legislation. He would not reveal the nature of his proposed bill, but it is expected to reflect the ideas of the President.

The commission traced the growth of holding companies after the war, "until 16 large holding company groups controlled over three-fourths of the privately owned industry in 1929 to 1932." The largest of these, the report said, is the United Corporation group, which owns the controlling interest in companies producing 19.8 per cent of the total electric energy generated. The Electric Bond & Share group was next with 13.6 per cent, and the Insull interests third with 11.1 per cent.

Of the total electric energy transmitted across State lines, 98.5 per cent was transmitted over lines of operating companies controlled by holding companies, the report said. The Electric Bond & Share Co. operated in 36 States, the Middle West Utilities Co. in 29, the Associated Gas & Electric Co. in 23, and the Standard Gas & Electric Co. in 19.

The commission is expected to conclude its reports with specific recommendations concerning holding companies, probably asking that they be licensed by the Government and their size limited.

"Write-ups" — increases in book value without increase in physical assets—amounted to $842,995,000 or 34.2 per cent of the capital of the 91 companies examined, the report said.

E. C. Gaylor Named Acting Job Manager

E. Claude Gaylor, of Laurel, Md., was appointed yesterday as acting manager of the southern Maryland office of the National Reemployment Service, at Hyattsville.

He will succeed T. J. Camfield, of Mount Rainier, who died Saturday. The appointment was made by Oliver C. Short, State director, of Baltimore.

The Alleged Great Aunt

By Henry Kitchell Webster, Janet Ayer Fairbank and Margaret Ayer Barnes

When Gilbert Meade sets out to discover whether Lily De Long, one time opera star, really was his great-uncle's wife, and entitled to a share in his fortune on his death, he decides that she is innocent of intrigue. The villain in the plot is her lawyer, Charles Bradley. Bradley, however, never suspected that a girl, who bears a striking resemblance to Lily, would turn up as her secretary. If she is a relative, his plans to get the money on Lily's death will be frustrated. The girl, who unbeknownst to Lily, is really her granddaughter, and Gilbert Meade returns to the house one day to find Lily gone. They suspect that a note, saying she has left for California, is a forgery, and send the police to find her if she boards a train at Albany, as the note states she intends doing.

THEY walked together to the barn; the car was gone. "Well," said Gilbert, "that looks as if she may have gone in that, with Albert driving. Nevertheless, I don't like to think of you alone in that house while I go to the bank," he said soberly.

As Gilbert approached the bank, he observed that the door stood hospitably open and a horse attached to an old-fashioned buggy was scattering oats from his nose bag on the sidewalk before it. Farmer's cars were again parked diagonally at the curb, along the village street. No scene could have been more completely reassuring in its rural simplicity. Gilbert felt suddenly a little absurd. This was no setting for sinister tragedy.

The girl in the bank, who had seemed so nervous the last time he had seen her, was sitting behind a counter on which stood a discreet brass sign, "REAL ESTATE." A pretty girl, he now observed, with big blue eyes, blonde hair and a slack-lipped, willing mouth.

Men Were Talking.

As Gilbert came in, she spoke over her shoulder to someone in the room behind her, and a young man appeared to take her place. She slid down from her stool and scuttled away into the rear quarters, out of sight.

Gilbert stood for a moment, uncertain as to whether or not she had gone to announce him. Two men were standing near the receiving window, talking in loud voices. "Yes, sir-ee," one of them was saying. "When you consider the number of banks that have closed, it makes you realize we got a lot to be thankful for."

The other man joined in. "I tell you James Bradley's nobody's fool. He's a slick feller when it comes to banking. When the bank examiners come around next month, I bet——"

The girl who had disappeared, now turned up in the door of the private office. "Did you want to see Mr. Bradley, Mr. Meade?"

"Yes, I hope he is in."

"Mr. James Bradley is," she said and paused. Her voice stiffened a shade, an odd quality of recitation creeping into it, as she added, "Mr. Charles Bradley just stepped out. He'll be back at any moment."

Gilbert wondered a little at her change of tone, but he could not help being impressed by the conversation he had just overheard. It took a good man to keep a bank afloat in these times and apparently James Bradley had the respect of his depositors. He went into the inner office to find the president sitting shrunken behind his desk, however, looking singularly unimposing. "How do you do," said Gilbert.

"Good day, Mr. Meade. What can I do for you?"

"I came to ask if you know what has happened to Miss De Long."

"Yes."

Not Much Surprised.

"Why do you ask? What has happened? I know nothing about her."

"She disappeared a few hours ago and left her house deserted. Alberto is gone, too."

James Bradley's eyes met his uncomfortably. "Well, well, what an extraordinary woman!" he said, somewhat inadequately. "But to tell you the truth, Mr. Meade, I'm not very much surprised."

"No?" asked Gilbert coolly.

"No. You see, Mr. Meade, she is very erratic and I may say—impulsive. And irascible, too—oh, very irascible. She and my brother, Charles, had a slight disagreement this morning," his voice was gaining conviction, "nothing important, you understand, and I'm sorry to say nothing unusual. Charles is a martyr to her bad temper. He came storming into the bank this morning, I understand."

Difficult to Manage.

James Bradley smiled excusingly before he continued. "It was just a few minutes after I left for the county seat this morning and he was very much upset over her lack of reason. You have no idea how difficult it has been to manage her affairs. We have worked hard over them for many years and I may say we have received very little compensation. And no appreciation. Not any."

Gilbert eyed the man attentively for a moment of silence. It did sound very plausible. But he persevered. "Possibly your brother might know something of what happened to her?"

The banker cast a furtive look across the desk at his caller. "Charles? I doubt if he knows more than I do."

"Where is he?" asked Gilbert.

"Wasn't he in the outer office?" James Bradley's voice was surprising. "He was here ten minutes ago, discussing a local loan. He may have stepped out to look over the security. I'll ask Miss Swanson." He touched a bell, and almost immediately the blonde, blue-eyed secretary appeared on the threshold. "Is Mr. Charles in the bank, Miss Swanson?"

"No sir. He left a few minutes ago, but I understood him to say he would be back soon." Her voice still retained that odd quality of recitation.

"Thank you, Miss Swanson."

She left the room instantly, thankfully—like an inadequate actress, Gilbert thought suddenly, not quite at home in her part in a play. James Bradley rose to his feet.

"If Charles knows anything of Miss De Long's movements, I will ask him to step around to her house and tell you, Mr. Meade, but you will undoubtedly find she has gone to New York—or even to Europe. She always follows her impulses like that, rgardless of how much she may inconvenience other people."

"How does she ordinarily travel, Mr. Bradley—by train or by motor?"

Knew Her Route.

"If she did go by motor, who do you think drove her?"

James Bradley smiled patiently. "How can I tell, Mr. Meade? Possibly a man from one of the garages here, or possibly Alberto. That would account for his absence. If she drove all the way to Albany, it would take some time."

Gilbert stiffened and was very careful not not to look at James Bradley. He was certain he had said nothing to give away the fact that Lily had left any word about Albany, and yet this crab of a banker evidently knew perfectly well what her plans were, possibly even the contents of her note. The conviction that the old man had not been straight with him swept over Gilbert on an invigorating wave of anger. He could think, however, of no further excuse for continuing the interview. "Good by, sir," he said stiffly. "If you hear from Miss De Long I hope you will let me know."

"You may count on it," the banker told him urbanely.

House Was Silent.

Gilbert walked soberly across the square and entered old Lily's front door. The house was silent as a tomb. From the window of his bedroom he could see Jane sitting quietly on a bench in the garden. Her face was very serious. For the first time Gilbert wondered if he should have sent her back to New York when they first read old Lily's note, away from all this unpleasant welter of deceit and possible danger.

She was very young—sitting out there in the late afternoon sunlight she looked like a child—and no one knew what this disappearance of Lily De Long might lead them into. He looked at her more closely. Her dark hair waved softly back off a low wide brow. Her hazel eyes were steady and her lips firm, and there was something steadfast about the set of her chin. All at once Gilbert realized that he couldn't have made her leave until she knew what had happened to Lily. That was the sort of girl she was.

He went out on his balcony and jumped down into the garden. "James Bradley knows something about Lily. He did his best to deceive me, but he tripped himself up." Reaching her side he poured out the story of his visit to the banker.

"What Mr. Bradley said might all be true," was her comment, "and Lily could have caught the Century at Albany. But I don't believe she did." The last words come slowly.

"No," he said, "Neither do I, after talking to James Bradley. And that Swanson girl! She was in a state of collapse. I'm a nervous wreck myself," he declared. "This suspense is dreadful."

"I know what we might do to pass the time," said Jane eagerly. "We could begin going over Lily's scrapbooks and we might find something that would give us a lead."

Gilbert's face lightened. "Let's get at them." He slipped his arm confidently through her's as they walked toward the garden door. "Anyway, we might find something about my great uncle and your problematical grandfather."

Culbertson on Bridge

Underbidding for Safety.

While Duplicate Bridge, when played in the form of team-of-four tournaments with cumulative scoring, is a great test of skill, at times it leads to strange variations from what is ordinarily considered good Bridge. I once played in a tournament in which my partner and I deliberately refused to bid a vulnerable Small Slam which we thought that we could probably make. This sounds like an indictment, for we sacrificed 750 points by stopping at game; yet when one considers that it was Duplicate Bridge which we were playing, and all the attendant circumstances, analysis will convince him that our underbidding was so well justified that if we had reached the makeable Small Slam contract we would have been guilty of an error.

In effect this underbidding is a safety measure. In the case I speak of we had completed 48 boards of a 60-board match. At the end of the 48 we were leading by 1,700 points, and the next 11 hands were of the dull type in which no more than a part-score can be bid and there is little opportunity to gain or lose more than 50 or 100 points. On the last deal we were vulnerable and knew that we were still at least 1,500 points ahead. We picked up the following cards, I being the South player.

North, Dealer.

North and South vulnerable.

North	East	South	West
1◇	Pass	2♠	Pass
3♣	Pass	4♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

When my partner opened with a diamond I had visions of a possible Slam, which were enhanced when North raised my forcing takeout of two spades and practically assured me that the suit was solid. Nevertheless, I contented myself with bidding four spades, and since my partner did not bid again the bidding was closed.

West opened the Jack of hearts and I made six-odd by setting up Dummy's diamonds and discarding my losing club and heart.

The reason for my pessimism was that, being 1,500 points ahead, we could afford to lose the 750 points of the Slam bonus and still win the match; but let us suppose that I bid six and that our opponents in the other room had also bid six. Perhaps some lucky break such as a good opening lead against us and a poor opening lead against them, or a choice in playing the Dummy, would have led to the contract's being made at one table and lost at the other. Our opponents would then be plus 1,430 points whereas we would be minus 100 points, plus the honors in each case. Our net loss in that case would be 1,530 points, sufficient to cost us the match.

As it happens, our opponents in the other room did bid and make six, since South bid four notrump instead of four spades and North went on to six spades. On the same opening lead the Slam was made, but we still won the match. I can not help pointing out, however, that if I had bid the Slam and if West had chosen to open a club instead of a heart, I could not have established the diamond suit without losing a club trick, and the match would not have turned out so well. It often pays to accept a sure small loss just as a matter of taking out insurance.
